ONE VISION

FLAMES WON'T FLICKER, WINGS KEEP FLYING & OILERS WILL FINALLY GUSH. SAYS US

THE HOCKEY NEWS PREDICTIONS meeting has been known for its cage-match, pound-the-table, pull-no-punches, (insert next cliche here) atmosphere. It can, and does, get ugly. On the flip side, our editors and writers occasionally agree on things, too.

For example, at this year's gathering, there was no argument around the table that the Atlantic Division is clearly the NHL's worst. After Tampa Bay, Detroit and Carey Price, er, Montreal, there's a considerable chasm until you reach a cluster of clubs that are treading water, in decline or just starting their upward trajectories.

That wasn't the only situation on which we had a common gut feel. Here are six more:

• Calgary would have been our requisite "fall-back" team if not for transactions and developments that will buoy them. Despite their poor puck possession numbers, the acquisitions of burgeoning stud/minute-muncher Dougie Hamilton and solid two-way performer Michael Frolik, and the return of a healthy Mark Giordano will guard against the two-steps forward, one-step-back syndrome.

• St. Louis will win the Central Division because they're balanced, boast a rising superstar in Vladimir Tarasenko and, overall, have the best club on paper. That paper will again go up in flames in the playoffs because that's what they do. Until they actually do win in the spring, we're not biting.

• Detroit, despite some greying of their key performers and question marks in other parts of the lineup, will qualify for the playoffs for a 25th consecutive season. They'll accomplish that because that's what they do. How can you bet against that record?

• Edmonton finally will begin ascending in the Pacific. This flies in the logic of the previous two projections – isn't disappointing just what Edmonton does? – but the change in leadership and the Connor McDavid factor trump their pattern. This feels like a revamped franchise with new karma.

• Los Angeles will play angry this season. Despite its gushing turmoil, this is a club steeped in pride, and they'll want to prove to the hockey world that reports of their demise are exaggerated. That they acquired a bear in Milan Lucic, who may now be in poked-mode, will aid that fired-up belly.

• And, finally, and most importantly, this is the Year of the Duck (see pg. 44).

WHO WILL WIN THE HART TROPHY?

IT'S ALL BUT KILLED THE SHOOTOUT IN THE AHL, AND THAT'S EXACTLY WHAT THE NHL IS HOPING FOR WITH 3-ON-3 OT

BY BOB DUFF

THERE'S AN OLD SAYING about good things coming in threes. The Three Bears, the Three Stooges, the Three Tenors – compilations of threes tend to be more satisfying and more effective.

The NHL is confident that by going to 3-on-3 play in overtime for 2015-16, it will eliminate the growing dissatisfaction caused by so many games being determined via the shootout. "Over the last number of years, more and more people have been interested in trying to get more games decided before the shootout," said Detroit Red Wings GM Ken Holland, a member of the NHL's competition committee and a long-time advocate of 3-on-3 OT.

A hybrid of what the NHL will deploy was utilized last season in the AHL, and the experiment worked. Only 67 of 268 extra-session games, just 25 percent, reached the shootout, way down from the 64.7 percent the season before.

In the NHL, 52.6 percent (306 out of 646) of five-minute 4-on-4 overtime games were extended to the shootout, much to the chagrin of people who want to see games decided by hockey plays. "It's a spin of roulette," said Detroit's Tomas Tatar. "You never know which way it will go. It's 50-50."

HOW WILL IT WORK?

Unlike the AHL, which went to four minutes of 3-on-3 overtime from the first whistle following the third minute of 4-on-4 play, the NHL will go directly to a five-minute 3-on-3 period in OT. It will remain sudden death, and the winning team will be awarded the extra point. Overtime remains a five-minute period.

If a team is penalized, it will never play with fewer than three skaters on the ice. The power play would be a 4-on-4 situation, as the team with the man advantage would get to add a player to the ice. If a team is two men short, the teams will play 5-on-3. Teams that opt to pull their goalie in overtime run the risk of sacrificing their point if they allow an empty-net goal.

At the end of regulation time, goaltenders will switch ends and the ice will be scraped of snow. If no goal is scored

GREGORY SHAMUS/GETTY IMAGES

WorldMags.net

during the extra session, the ice will be scraped again for the shootout, which remains unchanged in its format.

HOCKEY'S CRANE KICK?

When Mr. Miyagi taught the deadly finishing move to his pupil Danny in the 1980s classic The Karate Kid, he simply said of the crane kick, "no can defense." An NHL coach who's experienced 3-on-3 overtime feels the same explanation could apply to it. "Coaches have to let the horses run," said new Red Wings coach Jeff Blashill, who coached the AHL Grand Rapids Griffins last season.

With next to nothing in the form of secondary puck support available and no way to employ any sort of defensive system like the trap, coaches are left to send their most skilled players over the boards and hope for the best. "3-on-3 is about individual ability," Blashill said.

It will basically be a version of NBA fast break on skates, with end-to-end action and odd-man rushes to the extreme. "Lots of chances," said Detroit goalie Petr Mrazek, who also played part of last season in the AHL. "2-on-1s, breakaways. One mistake makes a breakaway, so it's going to be lots of fun."

In the AHL, most teams opted to go with a two-forward, one-defenseman formation, since on the rare occasions teams sent out three forwards, it generally ended in disaster. "Basically, it's man-on-man," said Detroit captain Henrik Zetterberg. "You have your guy, and if you lose him, he will be open."

Teams with slick puckhandling goalies like Mrazek will also find this beneficial. "If the other team makes a mistake, you can move the puck quick on them and make a 2-on-1 or a 3-on-1," Mrazek said.

OLD NEWS
Blashill gets a leg up on 3-on-3 strategy with his AHL experience.

Still, there are skeptics who are convinced some coach will devise a way to destroy the creative process. "Who knows what they'll come up with?" said Detroit goalie Jimmy Howard. "Maybe somebody will just stand three across the blueline the whole time."

WHO DOES IT BENEFIT?

You have to like the Chicago Blackhawks' chances of dominating 3-on-3, more so because they can send out Patrick Kane and Jonathan Toews with Duncan Keith than because they are the reigning Stanley Cup champions.

The Pittsburgh Penguins, with Sidney Crosby, Evgeni Malkin and Kris Letang at their disposal, also figure to be dangerous. And with all that open space, stopping feeds from Nicklas Backstrom and John Carlson to set up the one-timer of Washington's Alex Ovechkin seems an impossible task. Or how about the Lightning, with any combination of Steven Stamkos, Tyler Johnson, Ondrej Palat or Nikita Kucherov with Victor Hedman?

The Wings can throw out Henrik Zetterberg and Pavel Datsyuk backed by Niklas Kronwall or Mike Green, and then follow with Gustav Nyquist and Tatar. "Playing 3-on-3 is a lot of fun," Zetterberg said. "There's a lot of room. "It will be real exciting for the fans." TTON

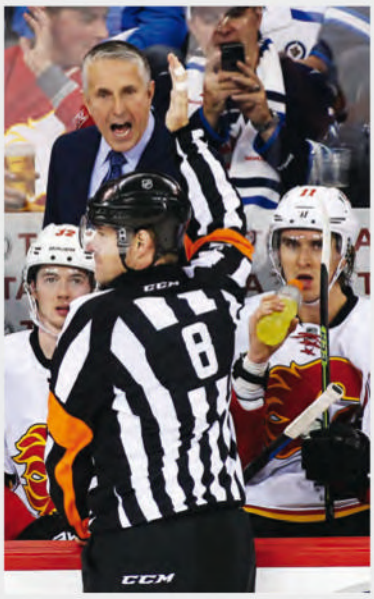
COACH CALLS



After years of haggling and disputed goals and non-goals, the NHL will try to get it right more often by instituting a coach's challenge. But like any challenge, there are limits.

First, in order for a coach to use his challenge, he must still have a timeout available to him. Second, only goals that were scored on possible offsides or those involving interference on the goaltender will be open to challenge. A coach can contest a good goal on the ice if he believes there was goaltender interference or one that was waived off by the on-ice officials due to goaltender interference that was incorrectly called.

Will it add a few minutes to games? Almost certainly. But the tradeoff here is that more calls will be right. And by limiting the number of challenges a coach can make, it will force coaches to contest only those calls where he thinks he has a reasonable chance of having them overturned. It's a fair tradeoff.

And probably the best aspect of it is that it doesn't take the decision out of the hands of the on-ice officials. They'll be the ones reviewing their own on-ice calls, in consultation with the video room in Toronto, via a video monitor located in the penalty box area, and there's nobody who wants to get it right more than they do. – KEN CAMPBELL

ROOKIE WATCH

JACK EICHEL

THE PHENOMS WILL BE THE FOCUS, BUT THERE ARE PLENTY OF PUPS IN THIS SEASON'S CALDER CHASE

BY RYAN KENNEDY

WHEN THE BUFFALO SABRES sell more than 17,000 tickets for a mid-July scrimmage, you know something is up.

That was the case when Jack Eichel hit the ice against his fellow rookies at First Niagara Center. In Edmonton, thousands showed up for Connor McDavid's scrimmage and had to be satisfied with a mere (cough) five-goal output by the teen. Simply put, there's a lot of hype surrounding the 2015-16 crop of first-year NHLers. Led by two phenoms, there will be a number of impact freshmen and interestingly enough, they will be clustered. Edmonton, Buffalo and Arizona are all in full youth-movement mode, and in 2015-16 the fun really starts for the three previously sad franchises. Here are the kids who will contend for rookie of the year.

CONNOR MCDAVID, EDMONTON, C

He's the best No. 1 overall pick the Oilers have ever had – and that's a competitive list. McDavid's incredible marriage of drive and natural talents make him one of the most exciting players to join the NHL in years and the comparisons to Sidney Crosby don't seem crazy when you watch him in person. Can he elevate the Oilers with his ability to make insane plays at high speeds? He'll get the chance early on.

JACK EICHEL, BUFFALO, C

Fans in Buffalo are nuts for Eichel, who did more in one year of college than most do in a four-year career. The first freshman to win the Hobey Baker Award since Paul Kariya, Eichel guided Boston University to the national title game and rang up plenty of points along the way, using a devastating stride and wicked shot. His north-south game is perfect for the NHL, and he'll have some nice veteran help with the Sabres.

SAM REINHART, BUFFALO, C

Almost forgotten thanks to Eichel-mania, Reinhart is a pretty darn good prospect who already had a nine-game NHL trial. Canada doesn't win gold at last year's world juniors without his faceoff heroics. Offense comes naturally, while responsible play elsewhere will make him a pro for a long time. The youngest bro of a solid hockey family does a little bit of everything. The only question is whether he ends up a center or winger.

MAX DOMI, ARIZONA, LW

Some thought he would be in the desert last year, but Domi went back to OHL London and ripped it up, much to the delight of Arizona GM Don Maloney. Like Reinhart, Domi was an integral part of Canada's WJC team and his combination of dazzling offense and physicality will be a nice boost for the rebuilding Coyotes. But the biggest feather in his cap was winning the OHL's Mickey Renaud Trophy as captain of the year.

ANTHONY DUCLAIR, ARIZONA, LW

The best thing about Duclair's potential is that some of it has already been confirmed. In an 18-game stint with the Rangers last season, 'The Duke' held his own before returning to junior and winning world juniors gold with Canada. A speedster with great hands who always makes something happen on the ice, Duclair was dealt to Arizona in the Keith Yandle trade – and New York fans were none too happy about it.

WorldMags.net

MCDAVID: CLAUS ANDERSEN/GETTY IMAGES; REILLY: RICHARD T GAGNON/GETTY IMAGES; DOMI: CLAUS ANDERSEN/GETTY IMAGES

NIKOLAJ EHLERS, WINNIPEG, LW

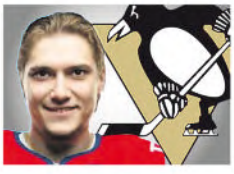
It's the perfect arrangement: Ehlers is far too advanced for another year of junior in Halifax, and the Jets could use some scoring punch on the left wing. The Danish national was absolutely incredible at the world juniors, helping his squad to its first-ever victory at the tournament and a spot in the quarterfinal. Ehlers will have a solid support staff in Winnipeg, where his speed and highlight-reel skills will have great use.

DARNELL NURSE, EDMONTON, D

All this talk of offense is nice, but let's not forget about the blueliners. After an exemplary junior career, look for Nurse to stake himself to a full-time NHL gig after his two-game stint in 2014-15. Big, mean and talented, Nurse can play the game a variety of ways, and his offense increased as his role got bigger with OHL Sault Ste. Marie over the years. The D-corps in Edmonton is still a work in progress, but Nurse will make it better.

SAM BENNETT, CALGARY, C

Shoulder surgery kept Bennett out of the spotlight last season, but once he mended it was all systems go. Bennett lit up the OHL with Kingston upon his return, putting up 11 goals and 24 points in 11 games before joining the Flames for the final game of the regular season. In the playoffs, the dynamic youngster hit the ground running and was a key part of the Flames' upset win over Vancouver in the first round.



SERGEI PLOTNIKOV, PITTSBURGH, LW

One of the latest in a string of Europeans to try their luck in the NHL later on, ex-KHLer Plotnikov is still Calder-eligible at 25. The big-bodied left winger plays a two-way game and can also score. The question is whether his skills will translate to North America, but if he gets the chance to play with Sidney Crosby or Evgeni Malkin, his odds for success will greatly increase. Plotnikov has a gold and silver from the worlds, too.

MIKE REILLY, MINNESOTA, D

He may be a villain in Columbus after exercising his right not to sign with the team that drafted him, but Reilly will be loved in his home state of Minnesota. Not only is his dad a part-owner of the Wild, but the gifted offensive defenseman was a mainstay on the NCAA Golden Gophers blueline before turning pro. Minnesota already has a great D-corps and Reilly can make it even deadlier thanks to his skill set.

MEET THE NEW GUYS

MOST ARE RECYCLED OLD FACES, BUT A FEW NEW ONES LIVEN UP THE GM AND COACHING RANKS AFTER A SUMMER OF TURNOVER

BY KEN CAMPBELL

PETER CHIARELLI

BRENDAN SHANAHAN & LOU LAMORIELLO

EVEN AT THIS EMBRYONIC stage of his hockey career, Connor McDavid has become accustomed to having a fairly significant impact on things. Just ask the bookkeeper for the Erie Otters. But even McDavid must have been surprised at the seismic effect he's already had on the Edmonton Oilers.

The moment Edmonton won the draft lottery and the right to pick McDavid first overall in the draft, everything changed. The Oilers, eager to make the most of the unique opportunity, and with the newfound clout of president Bob Nicholson, made sweeping changes to the organization. By bringing in GM Peter Chiarelli, who in turn brought in respected coach Todd McLellan, the team made a bold statement.

Chiarelli won a Stanley Cup with the Bruins four years ago and brings an instant respect factor to the front office. And for an organization that had become paralyzed, Chiarelli's willingness to make blockbuster deals and bold moves will be a breath of fresh air. His mixed bag of results in Boston indicates they don't always work out, but there is a need to be bold in Edmonton.

In McLellan, the Oilers feel as though they have finally landed their coach for the present and the future, and they showed it by giving him a five-year deal worth $3 million a season. McLellan brings a lot of success with him from San Jose, but he has a lot yet to prove as well as he could never get the Sharks over the playoff hump and win a championship.

Chiarelli and McLellan highlight an active off-season in terms of off-ice changes around the NHL. Here's a quick refresher on all the new guys you'll be hearing from this season:

DON SWEENEY
GM, BOSTON BRUINS

As the Bruins' new GM, Sweeney inherited the Bruins' salary cap mess and made a number of controversial moves around the draft. He has been with the team in varying capacities for almost a decade.

DAN BYLSMA
COACH, BUFFALO SABRES

Bylsma was out of work for all of one season after the Penguins let him go last summer. Now back behind the bench, he is charged with guiding the Sabres back to respectability.

JEFF BLASHILL
COACH, DETROIT RED WINGS

Generally regarded as the top coach outside the NHL, Blashill was a natural to replace Mike Babcock in Detroit. He has spent the past couple years grooming the Red Wings' prospects.

CHIARELLI: BRUCE BENNETT/GETTY IMAGES; LAMORIELLO: BRIAN B. BETTENCOURT/TORONTO STAR VIA GETTY IMAGES

WorldMags.net

PETER CHIARELLI
GM, EDMONTON OILERS

Getting a GM of Chiarelli's stature was considered a coup for the Oilers, and Chiarelli was quick to start making moves to turn the Edmonton Oilers into a playoff contender.

TODD MCLELLAN
COACH, EDMONTON OILERS

With a solid resume of working with young players in Detroit and San Jose, McLellan comes with a certain amount of clout as one of the most respected coaches in the game.

RAY SHERO
GM, NEW JERSEY DEVILS

The architect of Pittsburgh's Stanley Cup in 2009 has already shown he will be his own man as Devils GM after making big changes and distancing himself from the Lou Lamoriello regime.

JOHN HYNES
COACH, NEW JERSEY DEVILS

As the Penguins' minor league coach when Shero was GM in Pittsburgh, Hynes brings a solid resume of developing players that goes back to his days with USA Hockey's development program.

JEFF GORTON
GM, NEW YORK RANGERS

Few GMs have spent more time preparing for the position than Gorton has. He was an assistant GM in Boston for 15 years and worked under Glen Sather in New York for eight more.

DAVE HAKSTOL
COACH, PHILADELPHIA FLYERS

The Flyers went right off the board hiring Hakstol from the University of North Dakota to be their next coach. Despite it being his first NHL job, he got a five-year deal worth $10 million.

PETER DEBOER
COACH, SAN JOSE SHARKS

One of McLellan's assistant coaches with Canada at the World Championship, DeBoer took McLellan's old job and will be a good fit for a team with a strong mix of veterans and youngsters.

MIKE BABCOCK
COACH, TORONTO MAPLE LEAFS

He said it right at his first news conference. Babcock told the Maple Leafs there would be pain in the short term. But it won't be in Babcock's pocket book, with his eight-year, $50-million deal.

LOU LAMORIELLO
GM, TORONTO MAPLE LEAFS

No one saw this move coming. After 27 years in New Jersey with the Devils, Lamoriello brings a wealth of experience – and respect – to the Maple Leafs' GM chair.

SAY HELLO TO BROOKLYN

Score another one for the little guy, at least when it comes to NHL arenas. In an era when bigger seems better, the past two rinks into which NHL teams have moved are the two smallest in the league.

But the 15,795-seat Barclays Center is the only small thing about the New York Islanders' move to Brooklyn. The borough is home to 2.6 million residents and, contrary to popular belief, not all of them are hipsters. The move could not come at a better time for Barclays and Brooklyn, since the Islanders are already a good team and one that's on the rise in the Eastern Conference.

The home of basketball's Brooklyn Nets is not perfect for hockey. There are obstructed views, one end of the rink is basically devoid of lower bowl seating and the scoreboard will be situated over the blueline instead of center ice. Such is life when a hockey team makes its home in a facility that was built for hoops only.

Islanders fans who once had their own run-down place to call home will now have to make a 25-mile trek into hated New York Ranger territory to watch their team play. But the alternative was seeing them move far, far away, so this compromise just might work for them. – KEN CAMPBELL

A PERFECT KIND OF BORING

MONAHAN'S DULL FACADE DOESN'T MATCH THE MAN. BUT HE DOES DISPLAY A LITTLE 'CAPTAIN SERIOUS'

BY RANDY SPORTAK

BASED ON WHAT MOST of the hockey world sees, Sean Monahan would be the perfect soldier caught behind enemy lines. Watch any interview of the Calgary Flames center. With his stoic demeanor, straightforward statements and monotone delivery, you'd think he'd be great at divulging nothing more than name, rank and serial number under the worst kind of torture.

Give away his personality to the media? Not a chance.

According to roommate Lance Bouma, however, being the youngest Flame to reach the 30-goal mark isn't the only thing Monahan cracks. "He's a funny guy and makes me laugh all the time," Bouma said. "He's very mature for his age, but he's funny and has a lot of wit. Away from the rink, he opens up and is not the same guy you see every day…He has a dry sense of humor, and it's similar to Boring Sean Monahan."

Ah yes, Boring Sean Monahan (@boringmonahan), the excellent Twitter account that has brought all kinds of dry-witted gems:

"We're going to the playoffs! I'm happy, I asked some of the guys and they said they're happy. Coach Hartley doesn't look happy but he is."

"TJ Brodie said he burnt his toast this morning. I told him to turn his dial back to 3 or 3.5. Sometimes 4 is too hot for wide slot toasters."

"I have only spent 2 minutes and 8 seconds untangling my headphones this month. Johnny Gaudreau said he spent over 9 minutes."

The perpetrator behind the account is still a mystery ("I still think it's Chris Butler and Derek Smith," Monahan said, "but I have no idea."), yet even the target of the lines enjoys the humor. "It doesn't bug me," Monahan said. "I get a laugh out of it, so it's fun. I think I actually say some of the stuff that's on there, so it's funny."

See, Monahan does see the humor in himself and life. Heck, he's often the one behind it. "He's also a prankster in the room," said teammate Joe Colborne. "When 'Grats' (Brian McGrattan) was around, those two were dangerous together. One time, Grats put cheese in 'Mony's' coat pocket or some place he wouldn't notice for a while before it went rotten. From there, Mony took it to the next level. Pretty much for a month, you had to check every single pocket, every single shoe, your wallet, anything, because there'd be a piece of ham or cheese or something in it. I'd put him as one of the top pranksters on the team."

Guilty as charged. "I prank a lot of guys on the team," Monahan said. "About 70 percent of the time they're arguing who did it, and they don't know if it's me or 'Staje' (Matt Stajan) or 'Bolls' (Brandon Bollig). It gets pretty funny when you're the one who did it. You go to the rink and want to have fun. Obviously when the games come, it's serious and you play to win every night, but I don't think you can go to the rink every day and be serious all the time. A lot of people think that's how I am, but I'm actually really easy going and like to have fun."

The most fun, though, comes from winning, something Monahan and the Flames finally found themselves doing again last season. Instead of being in the Connor McDavid sweepstakes, the Flames reached the second round of the playoffs thanks in large part to Monahan, who has already proven capable of being that big, top-line center who can go up against opposing stars and still produce.

And to think the Flames had him fall into their lap with the sixth pick of the strong 2013 draft. Monahan has a late birthday (Oct. 12, 1994) and played on a last-place Ottawa 67's team in his draft year. He also missed 10 games that season due to a suspension and failed to make Canada's world juniors team. If not for those circumstances, Monahan could've cracked the top five. "If he had been drafted in his 17-year-old year, the year we went to the league semifinals…he would have gone higher in the draft," said Chris Byrne, who coached Monahan with the 67's and now scouts for the Los Angeles Kings. "But it didn't work out that way. Calgary's probably pretty happy it worked out the way it did."

Make that downright giddy, actually. With Monahan, Gaudreau and '14 first-rounder Sam Bennett, the Flames believe they have the building blocks at forward for a great future. Until Bennett joined the Flames for their playoff run, Monahan was the team's youngest player. "I have to remind myself he's only 20," Colborne said. "It shocks me every time I think about it. He acts like he's a veteran who's been in the league for a long time…I'm not saying he's Jonathan Toews, but it's amazing to see the comparison between those two. How many times has Mony come up clutch in a big game, scored that huge goal? Like Toews, he's not the biggest guy and not the fastest guy, and isn't going to run you through the boards, but he plays a hard game, a 200-foot-game."

Even if Monahan is a Toews-lite, the Flames will take it. That would mean having a leader in the Stampede City for years to come and the opportunity for success not seen since 1989's Stanley Cup. Monahan believes the first steps were made last season. "A lot of people are going to say we overachieved, but deep-down this is a team I believe in and the guys in the dressing room believe in," he said. "I think we're going to have a big year. This is the tightest team I've been on and…a pretty special team. I'm looking forward to this being a good team for a long time." THN

BACK TO ATTACK

TWO OF THE NHL'S BIGGEST AND MOST COLORFUL DUDES CAN DO IT ALL AT BOTH ENDS OF THE ICE

BY RYAN KENNEDY

THEY ARE TWO OF the most original birds in the NHL, so perhaps it's fitting that Brent Burns and Dustin Byfuglien also share the distinction of being dual threats. Not many players can succeed as both forwards and defensemen at the NHL level, but that's exactly what this pair has done.

Burns has delighted writers and fans with his colorful style, a persona punctuated by his beardy, mountain man look in his NHL headshot. Byfuglien elicits chuckles with his dry wit and corpulent build – the latter of which has been summer fodder for followers who play "guess the weight" based on grainy web photos. But when the games are played, the two defensemen are each a valuable piece of their franchise, with unparalleled flexibility in their games.

Perhaps it does take a special mind, after all.

BRENT BURNS

Drafted as a right winger by Minnesota in 2003, Burns has been known more as a defenseman since then. But in 2013-14, the San Jose Sharks found magic by putting him on a line with top-line center Joe Thornton and rookie sensation Tomas Hertl. "He could be a premier forward," said Sharks director of player development Larry Robinson, who was an associate coach the past three seasons. "He's got Patrick Kane-like hands around the net, the way he gets his shot off. And who's going to move him? He's so big. We needed him up front because we didn't have any size there."

But with the Sharks saying goodbye to Dan Boyle and Brad Stuart that summer, Burns went back to shore up the defense and adjustments had to be made again. "It's not easy," Burns said. "Playing before helped – you remember certain things. But I knew it was going to take some time to get all the little things, and I knew there were going to be growing pains going back."

Altering old habits that Burns picked up as a forward was one mission that Robinson – a Hall of Fame defenseman – and assistant coach Jim Johnson were tasked with. There was a lot of film shown to the burly Burns and a lot of frustration. Robinson noted his student was much better when the learning was on the ice, hands-on, and that's where the coaches made more headway. "We were just trying to improve his positioning," Robinson said. "His problems mostly come with not being patient enough. He needed to let the play come to him. With his reach, nobody should be able to get around him."

While the Sharks ended up having a down year – San Jose missed the playoffs for the first time in more than a decade – Burns was recognized for his efforts by being invited to the All-Star Game in Columbus. His 60 points in 82 games ranked second only to Ottawa dynamo Erik Karlsson in scoring by a blueliner, and he finished 17th among defensemen in shot attempts.

Still, it's a lot more fun to play forward. "Playing in the West, we see Getzlaf and Perry, Kopitar and Gaborik, the big puck possession guys… it's tough," he said. "When you're a winger you don't have to worry about it that much. You can just hang out and protect your point. When I was a winger I would chirp the 'D.' Now that I'm a defenseman, I chirp the wingers. But I love the challenge, I love those games."

Burns, 30, is not as much of a wild man as he had been known in the past. He has the word "Wild" tattooed on his back (not to mention a Harry Potter scene on his thigh), but that's a partial reference to the actual menagerie of pets he collected when he lived in Minnesota. That cadre of beasts includes pythons, bearded dragons, lionfish, parrots and Siberian huskies and was often the source of color in articles and TV features about Burns.

But he also has a human family, and his two small children are keeping him honest. For instance, the tattooed dad sometimes finds more graphics on his body from Frozen, the inescapable Disney movie: "I had an Anna and Elsa sticker on me all day yesterday," he said.

San Jose is a great place for Burns right now. The Sharks have a lot of players with young families, so there's a whole cohort of guys in the same stages of their lives. On the other hand, the dressing room can get a little chaotic. "It's interesting when you're trying to get dressed and there are five four-year-olds trying to smash each other in the room," he said. "You're trying to get dressed, and you're worried about your kid losing his melon."

If he needs to mellow out from games, kids or whatever, Burns can fall back on guitar, which he began to play a couple years ago. And while strumming can bring him some peace, the one thing Burns hasn't toned down over the years is his fashion sense. Already a stand-out at 6-foot-5, 230 pounds, Burns also makes his presence known with mind-altering outfits that can include garish suits paired with brightly colored shoes and socks – though the shoes and socks are different bright colors, of course. And naturally there's a story behind that, as well. "Early on, wearing black or blue got old," he said. "When I played with Cal Clutterbuck, it was always a race to see who could get the craziest suits. After a couple of those races, all you've got is crazy suits. I have fun with it. Guys give me crap about my backpack or my hat. I think it's a fun part of the game to let loose in."

HARRY HOW/GETTY IMAGES

BIG BODY
Byfuglien is a lot to handle as either a forward or a D-man.

For Robinson, it's a sign that Burns knows who he is. The Hall of Famer respects how Burns sometimes wears camo patterns to honor the armed forces and otherwise doesn't worry about color co-ordination. "He dresses how he feels," Robinson said. "You gotta give a guy credit for that and good for him."

DUSTIN BYFUGLIEN

Fellow Western Conference force Dustin Byfuglien is cut from a different cloth, though like Burns, you need a lot of cloth to begin with. At 6-foot-5, 260 pounds, Byfuglien has always been a match-up problem on the ice. As a member of the Chicago Blackhawks, he tortured goalies such as Roberto Luongo by blocking out the sun as a net-front presence. Like Burns, the Minnesota native was drafted as a right winger, but he also played defense and lined up at both positions as a member of the Winnipeg Jets this past season. You'd think that would require a little re-wiring time, but 'Big Buff' doesn't need much of a lead to turn back into a defenseman: "Thirty seconds," he said.

> YOU CAN DO A LOT OF GOOD THINGS AT FORWARD, BUT ON 'D' YOU SEE THE GAME DIFFERENTLY

Oddly, it's not the big bruisers that Byfuglien hates dealing with when his job is to clear the crease. It's players you might not expect. "Some of the older guys, their sticks always seem to find the puck when it comes around, and it's hard to tie their sticks up," he said. "Like Ales Hemsky, Erik Cole – their sticks are always there."

Winnipeg had Byfuglien up on the wing earlier in the season, especially when Evander Kane was out of the lineup. But once Kane was shipped to Buffalo and the return included right winger Drew Stafford, Byfuglien dropped back to the blueline, where he is much more comfortable. He doesn't actually like playing as a forward. "You're not in control of things," Byfuglien said. "You're chasing it. You can do a lot of good things up there, but on 'D' you see the game differently, back on the point."

And when Byfuglien is on the point, he can unleash his most deadly weapon: a bomb that is as harrowing as it is effective. He had an interesting way of describing what it's like to really get a hold of one: "It feels good," he said. "Just like if you hit a golf ball right down the fairway." And as a follow-up, does he golf often? "No," he said with perfect comedic pace. "I do not."

There were a few highs and lows to Byfuglien's most recent campaign. Like Burns, he was his squad's representative at the All-Star Game, and he helped the Jets to their first playoff berth since returning to Manitoba in 2011. And while the Kane trade, which also sent Zach Bogosian to Buffalo, bolstered the roster with Stafford and towering defenseman Tyler Myers, it also represented a necessary chemistry change in Winnipeg. Kane infamously didn't show up for a game in his hometown of Vancouver after an incident earlier in the day when he arrived for a team meeting in a track suit instead of a business suit, as per team rules. Byfuglien reportedly threw Kane's clothes in the shower soon after and a controversy was born. In the aftermath, other Jets players came out indirectly in favor of Byfuglien, noting team rules had to be followed.

DEBORA ROBINSON/NHLI VIA GETTY IMAGES

Byfuglien also caused waves in the media during the playoffs, when he took a page out of NFL star Marshawn Lynch's book by answering nearly every question in a scrum with one phrase, in this case: "As long as we stick together as a team, we'll be all right."

Coach Paul Maurice came to his player's defense at the time, noting Byfuglien had a great sense of humor and actually showed restraint, since his competitive nature probably would have led him to swear a blue streak had he not kept himself in check. Sticking up for his guy would clearly earn Maurice points with Byfuglien, though the defenseman already holds his bench boss up in high regard. "He's so smart," Byfuglien said. "The way he thinks helps everything, the team more than anything. You get comfy. Everyone knows their role and how to play the system."

And if you ask other NHL stars, they'll tell you how impressive it is for Byfuglien to be able to thrive in two different roles. "He's one of a kind," said Chicago's Duncan Keith, a former teammate of Byfuglien's with the Hawks. "There's nobody like him on and off the ice. Nobody does the things he can do. He was a great teammate, more than anything. I used to play a little forward back in the day and even took a practice up there this year. But for him to do it back and forth says a lot about his ability."

We know Byfuglien doesn't golf, so what does he do to chill out? As a son of Northern Minnesota, the answer is ice fishing – mainly walleye and trout, using either reels or tip-ups. "I just get out there and enjoy it," he said.

With Winnipeg playing Anaheim competitively, if not successfully in what was a first-round sweep, and with some very enticing young prospects emerging from the pipeline, Byfuglien should be enjoying his future with the Jets as well. Preferably as a defenseman, of course.

While it's rare for players with the stature of Burns and Byfuglien to have an impact at the highest level no matter where they line up, it will be interesting to see what the future holds for such "slash" players. Mitch Vande Sompel, an Islanders prospect, bounced between forward and defense in his junior career, but more so because of his slick skating than his carriage – he's actually a smaller player at 5-foot-10, 181 pounds.

But the template has been set. Burns and Byfuglien weren't the first to pull off the trick in the NHL, but they've certainly elevated the idea.

And they've done so with unique personalities. THN

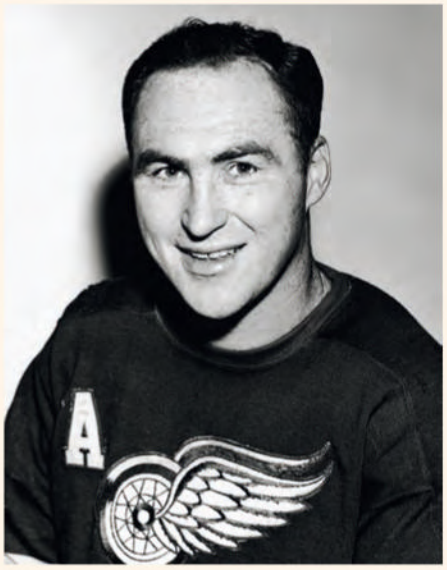
'RED' ROVER



With more than a decade of service as a defenseman for the Detroit Red Wings, Red Kelly established himself as one of the best of his era, with four Stanley Cup championships and a Norris Trophy to his name. During the 1959-60 campaign however, Kelly was hobbled by an ankle injury, prompting GM Jack Adams to attempt a trade with the New York Rangers.

According to famed hockey historian Brian McFarlane, Kelly preferred retirement to the Rangers and only came back to the game when a trade to Toronto could be orchestrated. But once Kelly donned the Blue and White, he did so as a center, not a defenseman. Kelly helped the Leafs to four more Cups as well and now he's a rare Hall of Famer: one who played two positions with equal success.

Mark Howe and Phil Housley, both known more as defensemen, also played forward during impressive NHL careers, as did players from way-back-when such as Dit Clapper, Ebbie Goodfellow and Reg Fleming, to name a few.

Along with Dustin Byfuglien and Brent Burns, there has been a smattering of players going back and forth in recent years, with Philadelphia Flyers defenseman Mark Streit being the most prominent.

Enforcers such as Wade Belak and David Koci were also nominally listed as both defensemen and wingers, though in their case it had less to do with their rushing capabilities and more so with how fast they made opponents' heart rates increase.

Though several "slash" players are in the Hall of Fame, it's rare for a player at any position to have won as many Cups as Kelly, however.

CHANGE FOR THE BETTER

SQUATS, YOGA AND...MATH? RYAN O'REILLY'S ECLECTIC ROUTINE KEEPS HIM ON HIGH ALERT

BY RONNIE SHUKER

SO YOU'RE IN THE gym, doing a squat or a lunge, holding an awkward yoga pose or trying to stay upright on a balance beam. Suddenly, your dad throws up a flashcard with five colors on it and tells you to name the color in the middle. But you can't drop the weight or break the pose. Somehow, while your muscles begin to burn and your balance starts to tip, your mind has the focus to find the answer.

That's just one of the legion of training tricks Ryan O'Reilly gets thrown his way from his father, Brian, while working out during the off-season. The motivation behind them goes to the heart of Ryan's training philosophy: combine physical and mental training to imitate game situations so you can adapt to anything thrown your way on the ice.

With such an unorthodox trainer, Ryan has one of the most unusual off-season regimens in the NHL. Every summer, he trains at the family's home just north of London, Ont., under the watchful eye of his father, who's constantly challenging him with mind games while he works out his body. Another trick Brian tries is shouting random math questions. "I might throw out something like 7x6/2+3x9," Brian said. "So now he has to also think under pressure, be agile under pressure, be aware under pressure, respond to a stimulant and then give me the answer."

Ryan's training regimen is always evolving, food- and fitness-wise. In the kitchen, he experimented with vegetarianism last season, taking meat almost entirely out of his diet while loading up on veggies and fruit. (He'd even try to go vegan if it weren't for his love of ice cream.) At the gym, his father is continually mixing things up with new exercises or tweaking existing ones. For any given exercise, he might have Ryan change the weight, use a kettlebell instead of a barbell or dumbbell, or simply switch his grip. It's all meant to mimic the randomness of hockey and build mental toughness. "After every season, you want to find new ways to push yourself," Ryan said. "When you're playing hockey, every game, every situation is different. It's such an instinct game that if you challenge yourself to do more things and get out of your comfort zone, you're training mentally as well. My dad always is constantly doing new exercises and finding different ways to dothem."

Ryan is used to all this, having basically been born in a gym. His father is a high-performance coach who has run a gym in various incarnations on the homestead in Varna, Ont., for the past 25 years. Ryan was raised with athletes all around him, coming and going through his dad's gym. He'd see athletes lifting weights, doing balance beam work and holding yoga poses, so he grew up thinking all of this was play.

When he was just four, Ryan was already doing a kids' form of yoga, learning how to breathe and stretch. Around 15 years old, he really became serious about it, and later became a bit of a yoga master to his ex-teammates in Colorado, many of whom he tried to convert. (It's even part of his personal life, as his girlfriend, Dayna Douros, is a yoga instructor in Denver.) Yoga is now an irreplaceable piece of his game-day preparation, and he even draws on it during games. "It taught me to always look inside yourself and find out the areas of tension, to put your mind in the right place and to be clear," Ryan said. "That's the zone you want to play hockey in. You want to have a clear mind. You want to be focused."

As a yogi and a Lady Byng Trophy winner, Ryan might evoke images of a Zen-like Buddha on the ice – he has a grand total of 64 career penalty minutes in more than 400 games – but beneath that peaceful veneer is a fiery competitor who still stews after a loss. He's been that way since he was a kid. As a tyke, if he lost a game, he'd sit in the dressing room and wouldn't leave until his parents dragged him out. Heck, even a ball hockey game had dire consequences. "He hates to lose," said his older brother Cal, who's played 113 games in the NHL. "As a kid...he was younger than me and my friends, but he'd always play with us. Whenever he lost, he'd start throwing sticks at everybody, so we knew to start running as soon as the game was over, because he'd start freaking out."

MICHAEL MARTIN/NHLI VIA GETTY IMAGES

WorldMags.net

BODY & MIND
For O'Reilly, building the brain is as key as muscles.

Along with a horde of athletes around them, Ryan, Cal and their two sisters grew up with a rotating cast of foster brothers and sisters. That's how Ryan came by the nickname 'Snook' – an Irish term for a child with a ton of energy and a predilection for mischief. His grandmother gave it to him when he was a boy. At the time, the family had two other Ryans living with them, and he was a little bowling ball of energy who constantly got into trouble. The nickname stuck, and even now, at 24, Ryan still occasionally gets into trouble at the gym when he's under his father's tutelage. "Any given day, when he offers resistance," Brian said, "whatever he resists, I attack."

Ryan made headlines for the wrong reasons this summer when he was charged with impaired driving in July after his truck crashed into a Tim Hortons in Lucan, Ont. But, armed with a shiny new $52.5-million contract, he is focused on getting a fresh start with the Buffalo Sabres after six seasons with the Colorado Avalanche. (Cal signed with the Sabres as well.) And he has his father to keep him grounded – at the gym, on the ice and in life – whenever he gets off track. "When I'm training with Snook, or he calls me after a game, all my questions are about self-evaluation, not evaluating other people," Brian said. "Unhappy people, unsuccessful people, evaluate other people. Happy people, successful people, self-evaluate. And when he's not happy, it's probably because he's evaluating someone else, and that's what I call him out on. That's my job as a coach, as a parent, as a person." THN

O'REILLY'S FAVES

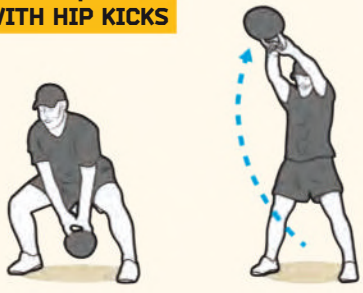
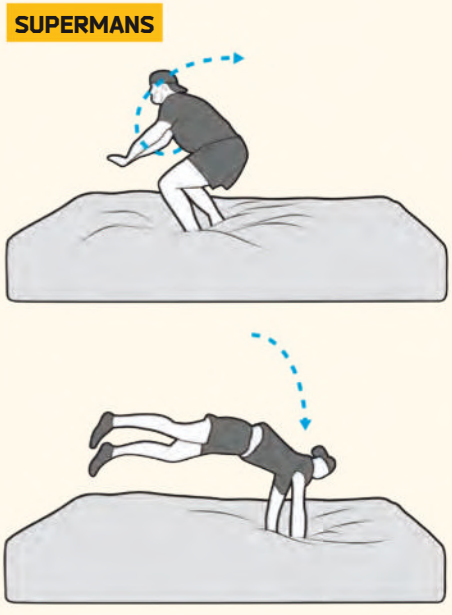
O'Reilly has teamed up with Go Pro Workouts to post his training regimen online. His program covers everything from strength, agility, core, balance and flexibility training. Check out a couple of his go-to exercises:

KETTLE BELL SUMO SQUAT WITH HIP KICKS



Stand tall with your feet shoulder-width apart. Squat down, pick up the kettle bell and raise it to knee level, keeping your arms straight. Next, lower the kettle bell a bit, bending your knees and swing it in a forward and upward movement. Pause briefly at head level and lower to starting position. Repeat. Perform three sets of 10 lifts.

SUPERMANS



Stand in the center of a mat. Jump in the air so your hips perform a 180-degree twist. You'll start facing the ceiling and land facing the mat, on your stomach. Repeat movement in the opposite direction. Perform 5-10 reps in 30 seconds.

THE NHL'S TOP

THE BEST PLAYER ON THE PLANET HAS QUIETLY PUT HIMSELF ON THE LIST OF ALL-GREAT HABS GOALIES

BY KEN CAMPBELL

DURING THE SUMMER, CAREY Price can often be found spending his days deep in the woods in the interior of British Columbia, bowhunting for big game. Actually, check that. He can't be found at all, and that's just the way he likes it. A guy has to have his "me" time once in a while, after all, and after the season he put up in 2014-15, nobody deserved a little time to gather his thoughts more than Price.

Price plays for a franchise that has made a rather regular habit of producing superstar goaltenders. That he makes Georges Vezina, who was nicknamed 'The Chicoutimi Cucumber' look like a nervous wreck, certainly helps him live up to those lofty predecessors. From Vezina to George Hainsworth to Bill Durnan to Jacques Plante to Gump Worsley to Ken Dryden to Patrick Roy, Price is quickly finding his way among the pantheon of Montreal Canadiens greats.

It's not that he won the Hart Trophy as the NHL's MVP – six goalies had done it prior to Price, one of them twice (Dominik Hasek) and two of them (Durnan and Jose Theodore) were Canadiens goalies themselves – it was how dominant he was in doing so. Price received 139 first-place votes for the Hart, Alex Ovechkin was second with eight. That's Wayne Gretzky territory. And Price was even more of an overwhelming choice for the Vezina Trophy, which is voted upon by GMs. He received 27 first-place votes and was second on three ballots. Only three goalies have received a higher percentage of first-place votes since the award changed from the goaltender(s) with the best goals-against average to the one voted as the best goalie by GMs in 1983. Hasek garnered 24 of 26 votes in 1997-98, Ed Belfour got 19 of 21 in 1990-91 and Pete Peeters earned all 21 votes in '82-83.

To the surprise of no one, Price is just as easy a choice as the No. 1 player in the NHL and, by extension, the world. He becomes only the second goaltender (Miikka Kiprusoff in 2006 was the other) to be ranked first overall since we began identifying the top 50 players in the league in 1994-95. Price is also the only goalie to become our top player in the NHL after being the No. 1 prospect in our annual Future Watch edition, which Price was in 2008. Peter Forsberg, who was named the No. 1 NHL player in 2004 and '05, was identified as the league's top prospect in 1995.

After turning the NHL Awards show into An Evening with Carey Price, the goaltender predictably thanked his teammates, saying there was no way he would have been able to garner all those awards without them. And in a strange way, he couldn't have been more right. Had the Canadiens not been so reliant on him and played so poorly in front of him at times, he likely wouldn't have been in position to win the awards. Only seven teams finished with a worse shot differential than the Canadiens, and only one of those teams, the Calgary Flames, made the playoffs. Montreal was consistently among the bottom third in possession stats.

Yet Price still managed to win 44 games, a franchise record. And speaking of franchise records, Price is well on his way to jamming his way into that group of Canadiens all-time great goaltenders. You could argue the only ones who are his statistical superior at this point are Plante, Roy and Dryden.

WorldMags.net

Price's .933 save percentage is the best ever recorded by a Canadiens goaltender. If you take away Price's four shootout victories last season, that would still give him the fifth-highest single-season win total, just two behind Plante.

Sometime in 2015-16, Price should surpass Dryden for third place on the all-time wins list, given he's only 25 behind. His 435 games are already third on the all-time list, and his 34 career shutouts are tied for fourth with Durnan. Price's nine shutouts last season represent as many as Plante ever had in any season and are one fewer than Durnan's total in 1948-49, Gerry McNeil's in '52-53 and Dryden's in '76-77. One guy he'll never catch is Hainsworth and his 75 career shutouts, 49 of which were earned during an era in which forward passes weren't allowed in the attacking zone.

The gaping hole in Price's resume, of course, is the dearth of Stanley Cups. In fact, Price has a losing record in the playoffs, and even when the Canadiens advanced to the Eastern Conference final two years ago, they have never ended particularly well for him. It's not as though he can't play in big games. He's won a World Junior Championship, was basically impenetrable at the 2014 Olympics and led the Hamilton Bulldogs to a Calder Cup in 2007.

It remains to be seen whether Price will ever get that elusive Stanley Cup and truly become one of the goaltending ghosts of this organization. But he is clearly doing his part.

THE BIG ONE The only thing missing from Price's resume is a Stanley Cup.

1 CAREY PRICE | MONTREAL | G | LAST YEAR: 25
No team relies on one player more than the Canadiens do on Price. Duplicating his performance from last season will come down to whether he can handle that kind of pressure and workload. There's nothing to suggest he won't.

2 JONATHAN TOEWS | CHICAGO | C | LAST YEAR: 3
If there's anyone who can carry the weight of expectation of an $84-million contract extension, it's Toews. The one thing missing from his repertoire is eye-popping offensive totals. But if you had to pick one center with whom to start a franchise, who would be a better pick?

3 ALEX OVECHKIN | WASHINGTON | LW | LAST YEAR: 16
Oh, how the mighty have fallen…then risen. There can be no doubt Ovechkin is the most dynamic scoring machine in the world today. He won his third straight Rocket Richard Trophy and fifth in his career. Coach Barry Trotz has him on board playing more responsibly.

4 SIDNEY CROSBY | PITTSBURGH | C | LAST YEAR: 1
Crosby must be wondering, "What did I do wrong?" It's much less about that and more about the seasons players ahead of him on this list had, though Crosby saw his goal total dip below 30 for the first time in his career when he's played anything close to a full season.

5 DUNCAN KEITH | CHICAGO | D | LAST YEAR: 10
Keith's Conn Smythe Trophy put an emphatic stamp on his value. Even though he wasn't a finalist for the Norris, Keith was a cyborg during the post-season, logging enormous amounts of ice time and keeping his game at a ridiculously high level at both ends of the ice.

6 JOHN TAVARES | NY ISLANDERS | C | LAST YEAR: 7
If not for an assist by Jamie Benn with 8.5 seconds remaining in the last game of the season, Tavares would have won his first scoring title. He's putting himself in elite company. Tavares, Ovechkin and Crosby have been finalists for the Hart two of the past three seasons.

7 ERIK KARLSSON | OTTAWA | D | LAST YEAR: 27
There is no better offensive blueliner in the game today and, after leading the Senators to a surprising playoff berth, Karlsson was awarded with the Norris. Much is made of his foibles in his own end, but part of being a great defenseman is the ability to move the puck out of trouble, and few do it better than Karlsson.

8 DREW DOUGHTY | LOS ANGELES | D | LAST YEAR: 2
No team had better possession stats than the Kings did with Doughty on the ice. And no team had anywhere near the shot attempts the Kings had with Doughty. Shockingly, last season was just the second time he has been a Norris finalist. Not sure what more he has to do to win one, but if he keeps doing it, he'll get one.

9 STEVEN STAMKOS | TAMPA BAY | C | LAST YEAR: 4
His standing took something of a hit when he failed to score a goal during the Stanley Cup final, but Stamkos remains one of the most dynamic goal scorers. He has 253 goals over the past six seasons, second only to Ovechkin's 266. Had Stamkos not missed half 2013-14 with a broken leg, he'd be No. 1.

10 VICTOR HEDMAN | TAMPA BAY | D | LAST YEAR: 45
We may all look back at the 2015 Stanley Cup final and identify that as the precise moment Hedman made the quantum leap into the elite upper crust of defensemen. In the first half of the series in particular, he was dominant at both ends of the ice. He will need to reserve space for Norris Trophies if that play continues.

11 PATRICK KANE | CHICAGO | RW | LAST YEAR: 15
Another scoring star who struggled to score in the Stanley Cup final. But Kane scored big when it counted, as usual. He has replaced Pavel Datsyuk as the league's pre-eminent dangler.

12 JAMIE BENN | DALLAS | LW | LAST YEAR: 14
The NHL's scoring champion scored four points in his final game and 10 points in the final three to take the title. Benn plays the kind of heavy game that's required in the west.

13 ANZE KOPITAR | LOS ANGELES | C | LAST YEAR: 5
Like many of his teammates, Kopitar had something of a down season in 2014-15. Still, no forward had better possession numbers in the NHL than Kopitar's. No surprise if he moves back into the top five next year.

14 RYAN GETZLAF | ANAHEIM | C | LAST YEAR: 6
No elite scorer has a higher percentage of even-strength points over the past three seasons than Getzlaf has. Of his 206 points since 2012-13, he has scored 150 at 5-on-5.

15 PEKKA RINNE | NASHVILLE | G | LAST YEAR: NR
Injuries took Rinne off the top 50 list last year, but his play during 2014-15 put him in the conversation with Price for the Vezina. Rinne's .923 save percentage was the second-best of his career.

16 TYLER SEGUIN | DALLAS | C | LAST YEAR: 18
Had Seguin not missed 11 games, there's a good chance he would have won the scoring championship over his linemate. He was on a pace for 89 points and should be good for at least that many in 2015-16.

17 SHEA WEBER | NASHVILLE | D | LAST YEAR: 11
One of the enduring mysteries in the NHL is how Weber continues to get lost in the shuffle when it comes to the Norris Trophy. We'll continue to be patient for the guy who has one of the league's hardest shots.

18 CLAUDE GIROUX | PHILADELPHIA | C | LAST YEAR: 9
Giroux failed to post a 50-assist season (or the equivalent) for the first time in five years, but he remains one of the most creative and deceptive setup men. He's been a remarkably durable player.

19 COREY PERRY | ANAHEIM | RW | LAST YEAR: 20
Even when you factor in that Perry missed 15 games, it was a down season for him in terms of goals and points. Only Ovechkin and Stamkos have more goals than Perry over the past six seasons, however.

20 PATRICE BERGERON | BOSTON | C | LAST YEAR: 8
He remains a darling of the advanced stats community, but Bergeron took a step back offensively after tallying 30 goals and 62 points in 2013-14. He is still one of the top faceoff men in the sport.

WorldMags.net

21 VLADIMIR TARASENKO | ST. LOUIS | RW | LAST YEAR: NR
The Blues must have been doing cartwheels when they got Tarasenko under contract for eight years in the summer. He shows every sign of being the game breaker the Blues have lacked for years.

22 P.K. SUBBAN | MONTREAL | D | LAST YEAR: 13
Nobody embraces celebrity in the fishbowl that is Montreal better than Subban. What's even better is he wants to be a difference maker on the ice and relishes the challenge of big games.

23 RYAN SUTER | MINNESOTA | D | LAST YEAR: 17
No player has logged more ice time than Suter the past three seasons. He thrives on the workload in all situations. If there's one criticism, he tends to put too much pressure on himself to live up to his massive contract.

24 HENRIK LUNDQVIST | NY RANGERS | G | LAST YEAR: 19
The Rangers found out what it was like to be without Lundqvist for an extended period for the first time in his career. His injury had no effect on his play, but the time to win the Cup is now.

25 PAVEL DATSYUK | DETROIT | C | LAST YEAR: 40
It was a wonderful bounce-back year in 2014-15 for the Red Wings' human highlight film, who at 36 was the oldest player in the league, by seven years, to average at least a point per game.

26 RYAN MCDONAGH | NY RANGERS | D | LAST YEAR: 22
For the second straight season, McDonagh was the best player on the Rangers in the playoffs. And he wasn't bad in the regular season, either.

27 EVGENI MALKIN | PITTSBURGH | C | LAST YEAR: 12
He remains a point-per-game player, but the only problem for Malkin over the past few seasons has been staying healthy enough to contribute.

28 JOE PAVELSKI | SAN JOSE | C | LAST YEAR: 28
After seasons of 41 and 37 goals, Pavelski has become a major sniper. He has the equivalent of 30-goal seasons each of the past four.

29 MARIAN HOSSA | CHICAGO | RW | LAST YEAR: 32
There was lots of talk of Hossa being a Hall of Famer during the Stanley Cup final. Not sure we agree, but he remains an outstanding two-way performer.

30 ZACH PARISE | MINNESOTA | LW | LAST YEAR: 30
His father's illness and death during the season took a toll on Parise, but he still managed to put up a 33-goal season for the Wild.

31 KRIS LETANG | PITTSBURGH | D | LAST YEAR: NR
There were times when Letang looked like the MVP of the star-studded Penguins. It was the first season since 2010-11 in which he played 60-plus games.

32 MAX PACIORETTY | MONTREAL | LW | LAST YEAR: NR
With 76 goals over the past two seasons, Pacioretty is the only consistent offensive weapon the Canadiens have. He needs some support.

33 OLIVER EKMAN-LARSSON | ARIZONA | D | LAST YEAR: 35
With his 23 goals in 2014-15, Ekman-Larsson set a single-season goal-scoring record for Swedish defensemen.

34 TYLER JOHNSON | TAMPA BAY | C | LAST YEAR: NR
A scoring threat at every level at which he has played, Johnson has entered the ranks of elite NHL point producers.

35 AARON EKBLAD | FLORIDA | D | LAST YEAR: NR
The rookie of the year proved to be prodigious and mature beyond his years on the ice and off. Great things await.

36 CONNOR MCDAVID | EDMONTON | C | LAST YEAR: NR
Cue the outrage. The kid hasn't even played a game in the NHL yet, and we're declaring him a star. Yes, he's that good.

37 MARK GIORDANO | CALGARY | D | LAST YEAR: NR
An injury robbed Giordano of a Norris Trophy-caliber season, but he still posted the highest offensive totals of his career.

38 JAKUB VORACEK | PHILADELPHIA | RW | LAST YEAR: NR
Only one player in the NHL had more assists than Voracek, who increased his points total by 19.

39 BRAYDEN HOLTBY | WASHINGTON | G | LAST YEAR: NR
The Capitals wondered how Holtby would respond to a heavy workload. After playing him 73 games, they don't anymore.

40 PHIL KESSEL | PITTSBURGH | RW | LAST YEAR: 44
Toronto fans will have to watch painfully as Kessel scores 40-plus goals for the Penguins. His own end of the ice? Hmm.

41 ANDREW LADD | WINNIPEG | LW | LAST YEAR: NR
When you talk about underrated players, Ladd's name should be at or near the top of the list. He scores, wins, leads and plays well everywhere.

42 NICK FOLIGNO | COLUMBUS | LW | LAST YEAR: NR
The biggest challenge for Foligno will be proving his spectacular offensive season in 2014-15 (31 goals, 73 points) wasn't an aberration.

FOLIGNO: JAMIE SABAU/NHLI VIA GETTY IMAGES; O'REILLY: BILL WIPPERT/NHLI VIA GETTY IMAGES

43 RYAN O'REILLY | BUFFALO | C | LAST YEAR: 36
He's always wanted to be paid like an elite center, and now he will be. Few players pay attention to detail better than this fellow.

44 BRENT BURNS | SAN JOSE | D | LAST YEAR: NR
Moving back to defense didn't hamper Burns' offensive production. He had a career year offensively by a mile in 2014-15.

45 RICK NASH | NY RANGERS | LW | LAST YEAR: NR
If Nash could produce in the playoffs the way he has in the regular season in recent years, he would be near the top of this list.

46 KEVIN SHATTENKIRK | ST. LOUIS | D | LAST YEAR: NR
He was prominent in off-season trade rumors, but it doesn't appear the Blues are interested in moving him. With good reason.

47 BEN BISHOP | TAMPA BAY | G | LAST YEAR: NR
Questions about how Bishop would respond to his first playoff exposure were answered with 13 wins and a trip to the final.

48 NICKLAS BACKSTROM | WASHINGTON | C | LAST YEAR: 31
Nobody chalked up more assists last season than Backstrom, who has notched a total of 121 helpers the past two seasons.

49 JIRI HUDLER | CALGARY | RW | LAST YEAR: NR
Career highs by a significant margin in goals and points helped power the Flames' ascension up the Western Conference.

50 JACK EICHEL | BUFFALO | C | LAST YEAR: NR
Winning the Hobey Baker Award as a freshman is no easy feat, and neither is being a star in the NHL, but Eichel is very capable.

BORN TO BE A LEADER

MCDONAGH HAS SKATED A STRAIGHT LINE FROM ST. PAUL TO THE TOP OF NEW YORK. NEXT UP, THE CUP

BY RYAN KENNEDY

ASSUMING RYAN MCDONAGH can bake a mean apple pie, you won't find a hockey player who represents the American ideal quite like the Rangers captain. Not only was he a multi-sport athlete who met his wife in high school, but he also warned younger students about the corrosive effects of drugs and alcohol along the way.

Leadership has always been a part of McDonagh's life, going way back to Cretin-Derham Hall, a private Catholic high school in St. Paul, Minnesota. Jim O'Neill has coached the Raiders for decades and remembers his star blueliner as a class act both on and off the ice. "He was a great kid around the school," O'Neill said. "Didn't like to stick out. But in his senior year he was asked to give a talk to a freshman values class about drugs and alcohol. He said 'the only reason I'm not going to make it (as a hockey player) is if I'm not good enough.' Pretty heady stuff for a 17-year-old. But he understood the importance of having a good base in your life."

It's a message McDonagh still recalls, and considering how easy it is for hockey culture in particular to throw kids off the path, it's one worth repeating. "It's a challenging time," McDonagh said. "There are a lot of things to distract you. I had a lot of great teachers and coaches, though. It's fun to be in the moment, but at the same time, those are crucial years that can set up the rest of your life."

To this day, McDonagh stresses how important it was for his development to play more than hockey, and he had great success in multiple venues. He played football and baseball in high school and even won a state title as a first baseman during his senior year, though he'll have to settle for being the third-most famous ball player from the Raiders behind Twins first baseman Joe Mauer and Hall of Famer Paul Molitor. McDonagh credits training for two other major sports alongside hockey for his athleticism, which has allowed him to play more than 23 minutes per night the past three seasons, twice eclipsing the 24 minute average. "Every time we play I see a lot of him and Dan Girardi and that's always a tough task," said star Islanders center John Tavares. "Especially when a guy can skate like he can. You think you have a step on him sometimes, but he's able to recover. So he's always challenging you to find opportunities."

Playing Minnesota high school hockey helped, too. Teams only play 17-minute periods, meaning they can really lean on their top players. O'Neill had McDonagh out every other shift for Cretin-Derham, matching against top lines and killing penalties. McDonagh's crowning achievement came as a junior, when he led the Raiders to a state title in 2006. And it wasn't close. "We beat Grand Rapids 7-0 and only gave up seven shots the entire game," O'Neill said. "It was a state record."

McDonagh, 26, easily could have skipped his senior year with the team to play against better competition elsewhere, but he decided to stay on and be true to his school. He ended up winning the state's coveted Mr. Hockey Award as the top senior hockey player but also held on to something just as important. "The values I learned in high school," he said, "I still carry with me."

Not to mention the relationships he made there. While hanging around the rink, McDonagh met Kaylee Keys, herself a multi-sport athlete in hockey, soccer and lacrosse. Keys was captain and all-state in hockey and went on to play a season for Div. I Bemidji State. She ended up being yet another skater who couldn't get past McDonagh: the couple married in 2013.

Another important Minnesota link in McDonagh's life is his uncle Steve Walsh, a former NFL quarterback with New Orleans and five other teams. McDonagh got to see his uncle play live a couple times and learned a lot from walking around with him. "You could see the respect he got from the players and coaches, because of the way he treated them," McDonagh said. "It's about those relationships you build."

> "RYAN'S ONE OF THE MOST COMPLETE DEFENSEMAN IN THE NHL"
> – JOHN TAVARES

McDonagh went on to the University of Wisconsin, playing on a sick D-corps that also included Brendan Smith, Justin Schultz and Jake Gardiner, not to mention future Rangers teammate Derek Stepan up front. The 2010 Badgers squad went all the way to the national championship game before losing to Boston College.

But eventually you have to take the boy out of the Midwest, and after a shockingly bad trade sent his rights from Montreal to New York for Scott Gomez, McDonagh got his NHL career started. He admits there was an adjustment to life in Gotham. "No question," he said. "It's pretty intimidating for even the first couple of years."

McDonagh originally set up shop near Central Park, but now he and Kaylee have a place in Manhattan's Tribeca neighborhood, a quieter locale where they enjoy walking their dog. Fishing and swimming are two pastimes for McDonagh, but those he has to save for his jaunts back to Minnesota. "No lakes here," he said. "It's great to have the big city feel for part of the year and then to escape from it in the summer."

There will be no escaping expectations for the New York Rangers this season. The team is right in the middle of a championship window and as the past two runs have indicated, they are a squad not to be trifled with in the post-season, with McDonagh leading the intimidating defense. "Ryan's one of the most complete defenseman in the league," Tavares said. "Not only does he skate so well, but he does a lot of the gritty things – blocks shots, gets in the corner, clears the front of the net. He's great at moving the puck, he's great at joining the rush, so he can play any style you want."

WELL ROUNDED
McDonagh credits playing multiple sports for his skills.

While compliments from your biggest rivals are nice, there's really only one mission on McDonagh's mind after two years of falling short. "Everybody looks at the end result and you want to win your last game of the season," he said. "We set ourselves up for this season and the Presidents Trophy was an accomplishment. At the same time, we're burning for something more." THN

SID VS. O

IT'S THE NHL'S BEST 1-ON-1 RIVALRY. WHO'S BETTER? FANS SIDE WITH OVECHKIN, SUITS WITH CROSBY

BY MATT LARKIN

IT WILL BE 10 years this fall since Sidney Crosby and Alex Ovechkin debuted in the NHL. The 2004-05 lockout produced the happy accident of two No. 1 overall picks commencing their careers simultaneously and, fair or not, they were destined for constant comparison. It didn't matter that they played different positions, Crosby center and Ovechkin left wing. They were the most exciting young forces in a league desperate for new flag bearers, and they've delivered on that hype time and again.

Who's better? The pendulum seems to swing back and forth year to year: It's Ovechkin, the big, fast, energetic man-child who helps Russia to world junior gold and goes first overall in the 2004 draft.

No, it's Crosby, the generational talent who torches major junior like no player since Eric Lindros and goes first overall in 2005.

No, it's 'Ovie,' the 2005-06 Calder Trophy winner. He outscores Crosby with 52 goals, many of them with jaw-dropping beauty.

No, damn it, it's 'Sid the Kid.' He explodes for 120 points as a 19-year-old sophomore to win the Art Ross and Hart Trophies in 2006-07. Youngest MVP in league history. Youngest scoring champion in major professional sports history.

Come on. It's Ovechkin. Sid sits out with a bum ankle for a large chunk of 2007-08 while 'Alexander the GR8' becomes the first player to score 65 goals in 12 years. He wins two straight MVPs.

Crosby's turn. The pair face off in the 2009 Eastern Conference semifinal between Crosby's Pittsburgh Penguins and Ovechkin's Washington Capitals. Both stars notch hat tricks in Game 2. The best player torch passes back to Crosby, whose Penguins play for the Stanley Cup for the second straight year and this time take it home. He's the youngest captain in league history to hoist the chalice. A year later? Golden goal in overtime at the Vancouver Games to crown Canada Olympic champion.

Then it's Ovechkin again, by default. His game slips under coach Dale Hunter, but at least Ovechkin is on the ice. Crosby misses bushels of games with concussion woes. He plays just 63 times from 2010-11 to 2011-12. His career is in jeopardy. Ovechkin scores 32 goals in an abbreviated 48-game season, and 2012-13 yields his third MVP.

Surprise: it's Crosby again. He's back healthy. He wins the 2013-14 scoring crown by 17 points. Another MVP. Ovechkin answers in 2014-15 with his second straight 50-goal campaign and fifth Rocket Richard Trophy.

And on it goes.

After a decade of constantly mentioning them in the same breath, where does the debate rest? Does one finally have an edge over the other? And is the answer still relevant as they approach the end of their primes?

MANO A MANO
'Sid' and 'Ovie' always put on a show when they go head to head.

WorldMags.net

OVIE

THEIR SKILL SET

There's no denying Crosby and Ovechkin are the top offensive players of their generation. Even juxtaposed with legends who played in higher-scoring eras, Crosby ranks fifth in NHL history in points per game at 1.36, between Bobby Orr and Marcel Dionne. Ovechkin sits 15th at 1.18, between Dale Hawerchuk and Pat LaFontaine. Crosby's and Ovechkin's marks will slide a bit as they age, but they're all-timers in production, especially when you take into consideration the era in which they played.

And they've gone about it in different ways. Don Cherry, long-time Coach's Corner analyst on Hockey Night In Canada and 1976 Jack Adams Award winner as coach of the year, has watched both their careers intently. And there's a clear No. 1 for him. "Right now, Crosby is the best player in the National Hockey League – there's no question," Cherry said. "He just wants the team to win. It doesn't matter if he scores or anybody scores. He really is a team guy. He has been the best ambassador for the game. Never ducks an interview, win or lose. He reminds me of Wayne Gretzky, the way he used to sell the game."

Cherry says Ovechkin has always been distinct from Crosby in that Ovechkin only ever has one thing on his mind: a burning desire to score. It's reflected in his 0.625 goals per game, which ranks fifth all-time. Ovechkin has also produced three of the top six single-season shot totals in NHL history, including two of the top three. He and Phil Esposito are the only two players to fire 500 shots on goal in a season. "Ovie's numbers are just overwhelming, especially in the way the game is played," said TSN game analyst Ray Ferraro, who had 408 goals and 898 points as a player. "There's just nobody who does what he does."

Washington Capitals defenseman Matt Niskanen and his teammate Brooks Orpik are the rarest of pairs in that they've both been teammates of Crosby and Ovechkin recently. Niskanen and Orpik left Pittsburgh for Washington for free agency after 2013-14 and, a year later, they have a stronger sense of Crosby and Ovechkin's styles than any other players do. "Sid is one of the best distributors of the puck, and Ovie has got to be the best finisher in the game right now," Niskanen said. "So it's been really cool for me being on both sides of that, playing with them and being on the ice at the same time, as they have different spots on the ice that they like to be in."

Ovechkin has the edge in perceived "wow" factor over Crosby. He has one of the hardest wrist shots in the game and still manages to zip it through defenders while contorting his body and using his speed to blow past them. He loves to hit, and Cherry describes him as someone players hate to hit back, as even that hurts every time. An informal social media fan vote asked THN readers who the better player is today, and Ovechkin won in a landslide.

Statistically, Crosby has been the more versatile NHLer. He can crank up the offense and score goals when needed – he has a 51-goal season and Rocket Richard Trophy – but he's been primarily dominant as a playmaker, twice topping 70 assists and racking up 84 in 2006-07.

Ferraro doesn't think it makes sense to compare Crosby and Ovechkin, as one simply has a lot more to do on the ice. "Crosby, he's such a complete player," Ferraro said. "I look at him in a different way than that I look at Ovechkin. Ovechkin has to put numbers on the board. Sid does, too, but because of his position, he's got to do other things. I've never coached a game in the NHL in my life, but I would tell Sid, 'Stop playing 200 feet. We've got other guys to play 200 feet. We need you to put up 115 points'…Ovie doesn't play a 200-foot game. He doesn't have to. His position is different."

THEIR EVOLUTION

Puckalytics.com tracks advanced statistics as far back as 2008-09, giving us a seven-year sample of data from which to compare Crosby and Ovechkin. For all the knocks on his defensive play, Ovechkin had a pronounced edge on Crosby from 2008-09 to 2010-11 in Corsi Close percentage relative to teammates. Corsi Close measures the percentage of shots directed toward the opposing net during games within one goal in Periods 1 and 2 or tied in Period 3. Since team play has a strong influence on that stat, factoring in how far or above the team percentage one finishes can give us a better perspective of individual two-way play. Ovechkin generates so many shot attempts that it boosts his Corsi numbers. He's defense by offense. Interestingly, his worst Corsi season was 2011-12 under Hunter, who tried to refine Ovechkin's defensive game and even cut his ice time. Ovechkin's finished with a Corsi Close 4.4 percent below the team average, easily the worst mark of his career. He also failed to lead the NHL in shots for the first and only time. Hardly a coincidence.

From 2011-12 to 2013-14, Crosby dusted Ovechkin in Corsi Close relative to teammates. He ranked among the league leaders, more than eight percent above his team's Corsi Close percentage in 2012-13 and 2013-14. Why does that matter? It shows evolution. Crosby's coach and system didn't change – it was Dan Bylsma for six straight seasons – but his impact on possession did. He devotes himself to tinkering and improving every little detail of his game.

Crosby won fewer than half his faceoffs in each of his first two seasons before hovering around 51 percent in his next two. He won at least 52.5 percent of his draws in four of five seasons after that, topping 54 percent three times and 55 twice. He slipped last season, but that doesn't shake the overwhelming perception that Crosby works hard at every facet of the game. That's one of the reasons our other Crosby vs. Ovechkin vote went so differently. Informally polling former players, executives and coaches produced a massive Crosby victory. No hockey minds, save for a few, said they'd take Ovechkin over Crosby. Some said it wasn't close. So while Ovie wins the crowd, the experts haven't wavered in their support for No. 87.

WORTHY FOES Crosby and Ovechkin have a grudging respect for one another.

That doesn't mean No. 8 can't evolve, too, of course. Last season marked the first time in four years Ovechkin posted a better Corsi Close relative to his team than Crosby did. Ovechkin found something closer to a two-way game under new coach Barry Trotz. Interestingly, Trotz delivered on his promise to improve Ovechkin defensively without sacrificing offense, as his goals and shots actually increased year over year. "A few years ago they said he was finished, and Ovie came back strong and sensationally," Cherry said. "Now he's a superstar again. Ovie must realize they're either at your throat or your feet."

Ferraro played with electric Russian sniper Ilya Kovalchuk in Atlanta and sees a similarity between Kovalchuk and Ovechkin, not just in the goal-scoring trait but also in their emotional approaches to the game. "Whenever there's a problem, they both have always appeared to think they're the only solution," Ferraro said. "They want to win so bad, and when it doesn't happen they get frustrated. And I thought some of that left Ovechkin this year. He didn't look like he had the need to solve everything himself. And that's a big difference in how you play."

So if Trotz has molded a more mature Ovechkin, it's no wonder he caught up to Crosby in the public eye and on the scoresheet in 2014-15. Crosby, though, deserves a pass for relatively underwhelming numbers considering the support he had. He no longer centered Pascal Dupuis and Chris Kunitz on the league's most dominant line. Dupuis succumbed to blood clots and the suddenly declining Kunitz played his way off Crosby's wing for extended stretches. On a Penguins team that barely made the playoffs, Crosby cycled through David Perron, Patric Hornqvist, Daniel Winnik, Steve Downie and Blake Comeau. As Ferraro points out, the Pens became too top-heavy, and adding grinding forwards in an effort to become harder to play against watered down their skill. That suppressed Crosby's numbers. Meanwhile, Ferraro added, Ovechkin has spent virtually his entire career on a line with all-world center Nicklas Backstrom. "You can't name me five players in the league more underrated than him," Ferraro said.

It's safe to say Crosby's numbers will spike back up if Phil Kessel ends up on his wing and not Malkin's.

THEIR LEAGUES

Crosby and Ovechkin can retire today as slam-dunk Hall of Famers. Their resumes impress for different reasons. Ovechkin owns a significant edge in individual accolades. He's a seven-time first-team All-Star. He won the Calder, which Crosby can never win. Ovechkin has one scoring crown, three Harts and three Ted Lindsay Awards for MVP as voted by the players.

It's not like Crosby's individual trophy case is barren: three first-team All-Star selections, two Art Rosses, two Harts and three Lindsays. But Crosby's accolades have a much stronger team slant. There's the 2009 Stanley Cup and 2008 appearance in the final. The Hall of Fame factors in international accomplishments, and there's no contest there. Crosby has two gold medals and scored the winning goal for Canada in two straight Olympics. The fan vote and hockey-mind vote apply here again, as fans slant toward the guy with the eye-popping solo numbers and the industry folk champion the team guy.

Crosby and Ovechkin have spent their entire careers in the same conference and share a division nowadays, too. Do they think about besting each other every time the Penguins and Capitals play? Yes and no, according to Niskanen. "I never notice them acknowledging or comparing each other," he said. "They both kind of just stay away from that. With that competitive nature, they have just a little bit of hate for each other, but I think at the same time they both respect each other's game. One probably wishes he had the other's skill set at times. I bet Sid wishes he had that kind of shot, that kind of threat from a distance that Ovie has, and I bet you Ovie sometimes wishes he had Sid's vision or his playmaking ability."

THEIR FUTURES

The most intriguing question in the Crosby/Ovechkin debate today isn't who's better. It's who's better than both of them. For the first time since they joined the league, neither is the automatic choice for world's premier player. Drew Doughty, whom Ray Ferraro likens to a hockey savant, dominates the defense position with effortless zeal. Jonathan Toews is the NHL's most respected captain. And one star player in particular elevated from star to superstar in 2014-15, transcending his position to capture the Hart Trophy. "The goalie can impact the game greater than anybody else," Ferraro said. "I don't think that's even up for debate. And Carey Price is the best goalie. So, right now, I would say there's nobody that can impact the game like Carey Price can. Montreal got to where they got to on his back. And unfortunately he couldn't score on the power play, and so that was it. They were done."

We'll soon finish debating Crosby versus Ovechkin as the game's best player, if we haven't already. Both men will begin to decline as they reach their 30s. And, fittingly, Connor McDavid and Jack Eichel arrive this season as the most hyped prospect tandem since Crosby and Ovechkin. Trying to pick Sid or Ovie as the best player of his generation, however, will endure as a popular barroom exercise. Here's hoping they retire the same year and ignite the argument again as Hall of Fame inductees on the same day.

It would be all too fitting. THN

CHANGING HIS STRIPES

HALL HOPES REINING IN HIS RECKLESSNESS WILL KEEP HIM ON THE ICE AND OFF THE TRAINER'S TABLE

BY RYAN KENNEDY

FOR MANY NORTH AMERICAN hockey fans, the World Championship is a cute little tournament over in Europe that happens during the NHL's post-season. It's nice if Canada or the U.S. wins, but no big deal if a group of players who missed the "real" playoffs or got knocked out early can't close against the finest from the KHL or Finland. But for Taylor Hall, winning gold in Prague was a big deal – because the last time he played for a title, it was the second of back-to-back Memorial Cups as a member of major junior's Windsor Spitfires in 2010. "It was great just to win again," he said. "To have that feeling and play in pressure games."

Since becoming the first of three consecutive No. 1 overall picks by the Oilers, Hall has been the best player in Edmonton but with no team success. On that Canadian worlds team, Hall played with elite talent, specifically linemate Sidney Crosby. "Taylor can play with anyone in the game, but it's awfully nice when you get to skate next to the best player in the world," said Hockey Canada president-CEO Tom Renney. "They really complemented each other, and their line really kept the opponent off balance."

Due to the cosmic whiplash of NHL parity, that Canadian team happened to be insanely stacked, with Hall and Crosby joined by big names such as Claude Giroux, Nathan MacKinnon, Brent Burns – and the player selected one spot after Hall in 2010, Tyler Seguin. Back then, "Taylor vs. Tyler" was a fun draft debate. Now it was time for a reunion of sorts. "It was fun," Hall said. "We had never been on the same team before. He's a really good guy, and we rooted for each other."

With the gold medal in the books, Hall got back to business this summer. Edmonton made huge waves when the franchise once again lucked into the No. 1 pick overall via the draft lottery, and this time the prize was Connor McDavid, a center who is breathlessly compared to Crosby. Hall immediately reached out to McDavid via Twitter, joking "left shot, black tape, left side," and the excitement of future success is mutual. "He's an unbelievable player," McDavid said. "He's got speed that is absolutely off-the-charts, and what he does on the ice is pretty spectacular. If I ever end up on the same line as him, it would be pretty special."

The key now for Edmonton is to tamp down the hype, even though McDavid looks like such a game-changer. For Hall, it's not just a matter of adding one more weapon to an impressive, yet top-heavy offensive arsenal. "We still have a long way to go as a team," he said. "Not just personnel-wise, but building a winning mentality and a culture in Edmonton."

At 23 years old, Hall has already been through the wars with the Oilers. The franchise has never made the playoffs during his tenure, and in a town that obsesses over local sports, expectations were high when he rolled into town as well. It was a lot to put on the shoulders of a teenager, but as it turns out, Hall and young buddies Jordan Eberle and Sam Gagner led the offense on that glue-and-popsicle-stick team. "I thought he was great," said Renney, the Oilers coach that season. "He was dialed in every game. As a coach, if you have players coming to the rink like that every day – we probably could have used a few more like him. Taylor is certainly one of those guys that his teammates watch and recognize the level of commitment and excellence he brings to every single game."

If there has been one knock on Hall in his career, it's his recklessness on the ice. It's a well-meaning kind of recklessness – you can see that he wants to be a difference-maker, and that's why he charges at the puck so quickly – but it has often put him in peril. At the 2010 world juniors, Slovakian defenseman Peter Hrasko caught Hall with what appeared to be a life-ending hip check, though Hall got up fine. Drew Doughty has crushed him in the NHL, and even old Windsor teammate Ryan Ellis sent Hall flying when the Oilers played Nashville this past season.

And in the interest of balanced coverage, let it be known that Hall himself has devastated opponents such as Jamie Benn and Brian Gionta. But since Hall has missed a slew of games due to a variety of injuries, keeping score isn't going to help his career. "You get injured a few times and you start to look in the mirror," Hall said. "The biggest way to contribute is to hit the scoresheet every game, so maybe you don't skate into the corner going a million miles an hour anymore."

Needless to say, a healthy Hall is the most dangerous Hall. He spends his summers training with his father, Steve, a former football player and Olympic bobsledder who preaches the advantages of being an overall athlete first. "He's always been a really good hockey dad since I was a kid," Hall said. "And with the exception of injuries, I've been on the upswing as an NHLer."

Hall is already known for his explosive skating, but continues to work on speed in the summer with sprinting, shuttle runs, agility exercises and stair running.

As a member of the Oilers, Hall may have felt like the stairs to success never get to the top, but with a new season ahead of him and more talent than ever in Edmonton, that elusive playoff spot is at least on the horizon. THN

TROPHY HUNTING

WEBER'S HAD NEAR MISSES FOR THE NORRIS, BUT HE ONLY WANTS TO WIN THE CUP...AND FANTASY FOOTBALL

BY KEN CAMPBELL

OF THE 61 TIMES the Norris Trophy has been awarded, only once in NHL history has the margin of victory been closer than it was in 2011 and 2012, when Shea Weber finished second in voting to Nicklas Lidstrom and Erik Karlsson. And that was in 1996 when Chris Chelios narrowly beat out Ray Bourque for the trophy that Bourque had already won five times in his career. And that was Chelios' third Norris. Come to think of it, the Norris is one of those baubles that tends to clutter guys' trophy cases. Bobby Orr has eight of them and Doug Harvey and Lidstrom each have seven. In fact, almost two-thirds of the Norris Trophies that have been awarded – 39 of them to be exact – have been won by eight guys.

Shea Weber's name isn't on the Norris, though David Poile, Weber's GM with the Nashville Predators, has a novel idea. "If there was an aggregate of your performance in the past three to five years who was the best defenseman the past three to five years," Poile said, "he would probably win that." But, alas, there is not, and Weber is without a Norris after blowing out 30 candles on his birthday cake this summer. None to worry, though. Al MacInnis didn't win his first and only Norris until he was 35, and he's in the Hall of Fame. Harry Howell didn't win it until he was 34 and Pierre Pilote was 31. Heck, it took Lidstrom until he was 31 to win his first Norris, then he went out and won six more of them.

They do not award the Norris for the guy who shows up to camp in the best shape year after year. Nor do they give it to the best leader, the most selfless team guy or the guy who has a slapshot that instills fear into the hearts of both opponents – and even teammates, sometimes. So how is Weber to compete against the likes of Karlsson, who makes every offensive play a work of art, or P.K. Subban, who plays in Montreal and is just as dynamic off the ice as he is on it? "It sounds like I'm complaining, but it's our reality," Poile said. "We've been on national TV about four times in 15 years. Not this year. In 15 years."

All of this might matter if Weber actually cared about winning the Norris, which he doesn't. He really doesn't. And not in the same way a guy who's in the last year of his deal doesn't care about his contract, which he does. Those who know Weber best insist that individual accolades are the furthest thing from his mind, that he is so concerned about the collective that he even finds talking about himself a little painful. "Nah, that's fine," Weber said about the lack of personal recognition in the form of the Norris. "The big silver trophy that weighs about 32 or 33 pounds would be nice to have."

SHUT UP, PUT UP Weber would rather shoot for goals than shoot his mouth off.

PRED PRIDE
Weber's team-first mentality was instilled early on.

Weber has come so close to the Norris Trophy he could taste it, but it's pretty obvious he's been a career wallflower when it comes to dancing with the chance to win the Stanley Cup. We know he hasn't lifted it because he's not aware that it actually weighs 34.5 pounds. We also know he hasn't lifted it because in 10 years in the league, he's won one fewer playoff round (two) than guys like Duncan Keith and Brent Seabrook have won Stanley Cups (three). The Predators just can't seem to get it right, but not for a lack of trying. And certainly not because they don't have a defensive backbone. Led by Weber, Nashville had at various times a murderers' row of blueline talent, present company included. The Predators have one of the best goaltenders in the world in Pekka Rinne and a blueline corps that is the envy of, oh, about 90 percent of the league. They have an all-world, Stanley Cup-winning coach now in Peter Laviolette…and they still lost in the first round of the playoffs, in no small part because they lost Weber in Game 2 to a dislocated kneecap that required off-season surgery.

It's impossible to quantify what Weber's loss meant, but when you take a guy who can play 25 minutes of a regulation game, contribute offense and shut down the opponent's top players, it's bound to have a negative effect on your lineup. You get the sense that Nashville will put it together someday. We don't know when. You also get the sense Weber will receive his due. But again, we're still waiting. "What he would really want is to win the Stanley Cup…and in that year win the Norris," Poile said. "In that order."

Perhaps then people will talk about Weber. That's what it's going to have to take because he's not going to do it himself. He'll engage and play along, but if you really want to get him to start talking, you have a better chance getting him to open up about his football fantasy team than anything else. He'll talk incessantly about that. But when it comes to heaping anything amounting to attention on himself, good luck. "I taught team-first, and it was pretty well pounded into their heads," James Weber said of his sons Shea and Brandon. "We didn't pay too much attention to the number of goals he scored or whatever."

James and his wife, Tracy, raised their family in the picturesque town of Sicamous, in the British Columbia interior. It claims to have more than 600 miles of shoreline, seriously, and is billed as the Houseboat Capital of Canada. It looks like a postcard, and it produces two things – lumber and hockey players. Despite having a population of just over 3,000 it is home to NHLers and former NHLers Weber, Cody Franson, Colin Fraser and Kris Beech. Two other players – Andrew Kozek and Adrian Veideman – played U.S. college hockey and had careers in Europe. James was a planer at the Louisiana Pacific Mill for 28 years before losing his job and now works with Franson's father, Cal, at the Sicamous and District Recreation Centre driving the Zamboni. Until her death from a brain tumor in 2010, Tracy operated a hairdressing salon. James claims his son got his unassuming demeanor from him, but his quiet relentlessness and persistence from his mother.

It was in Sicamous that Weber's humble roots were planted. Under the watchful eye of his coach and father, Weber's game developed and his team-first attitude germinated on teams where everyone who showed up would make the squad because there were so few kids around. The only truly elite hockey Weber played as a youngster was when his parents would make a weekly trek to Vancouver for a couple months every year for him to play spring hockey on a team with Andrew Ladd. "There was a big difference, a lot of the times, in the skill level between the best players and the worst players on the team," James recalled of his son's Sicamous days. "So you had to be able to not get upset about how bad some of the guys you were playing with were if they can't take a pass or whatever. That probably goes into it a little bit, too."

Weber's a huge Toronto Blue Jays fan, but what really floats his boat is being a fantasy football GM. Last year he was in two leagues, one with other Predators and one with his buddies in Kelowna, B.C. "I won the one league and I missed the playoffs in the other," Weber said. "I've got the same GM for both teams, and I can't fire him."

Probably a good thing, since the euphoria of finishing first among his professional peers in Nashville nicely offsets the humiliation of losing to his real-world buddies. Wouldn't want that ego to get out of control, would we? "I had a later pick (in the Nashville league)," he said, "so I think that's what paid off because I picked back to back in the snake draft. In the other pool I had the second overall pick and I took (LeSean) McCoy and he had good rushing yards, but he didn't get the touchdowns everyone expected. I didn't have a quarterback. I took (Nick) Foles and Foles wasn't very good and everything just kind of came down on me.

"(The Nashville league) is a keeper league so I had three keepers and I kept (Matt) Forte, (Rob) Gronkowski and Demaryius Thomas, which is a great start. I want to say I took (C.J.) Spiller, which didn't work out, but I took (Jeremy) Maclin, who really worked out for me, so I had two solid receivers. I traded for Russell Wilson, so that put me over the top. I had Foles in both leagues and when Foles got hurt, I had to make a trade."

Did you get all that? Because that's about as much talking about Weber as you're going to get from him. In the quarterfinal game at the Sochi Olympics in 2014, Canada narrowly defeated Latvia in a game in which it dominated. The Latvians displayed an uncanny (or crazy) penchant for getting in front of Weber's slapshots from the blueline, which is not always a good career or life decision. When it was suggested to Weber that perhaps those Latvian guys didn't have the NHL Center Ice Package, Weber looked at his inquisitor with a completely straight face and said he didn't know whether they watched NHL games. "It's tough because I really don't like talking about myself," Weber said. "It's not something I like doing. I'd rather talk about the success of our group, and that's why I play the game. I love the team aspect, the camaraderie. And that's why I love coming to work every day."

Poile likes to tell the story about how the Predators discovered Weber. First of all, if you're looking for defensemen, Kelowna is a good place to start. In addition to Weber, the Rockets have produced Duncan Keith, Tyler

> – SHEA WEBER

Myers, Luke Schenn, Josh Gorges, Tyson Barrie, Alexander Edler, Scott Hannan and Kyle Cumiskey over the years. As the story goes, the Predators had taken a kid by the name of Tomas Slovak in the second round of 2001 draft. They would go to Kelowna to monitor his progress and the more they went to watch Slovak, the more they couldn't keep their eyes off a tall, skinny kid named Shea Weber. The Predators took him in the second round, 49th overall, in the legendary 2003 draft, which is turning out to be one of the best in history. Weber would undoubtedly be a top-five pick if NHL teams were granted a do-over. To be sure, with a cap hit of $7.9 million and a salary of $14 million next season, he is that draft's top wage earner.

But you don't get offer sheets like the one the Philadelphia Flyers presented him in 2012 without being worth the money. Weber shows up to training camp in the best shape of any player on the roster year after year and while his words are few, each one carries an inordinate amount of weight. Although some will claim Roman Josi actually had a better year than Weber in 2014-15, those close to the team say that emergence comes from the comfort level of playing with Weber. "What you see is what you get," Poile said of Weber. "He was a shy 18-year-old when we drafted him. He's not as shy anymore. He's a terrific person and a really good leader. It's all in-house with him. He sets it so much by example. How he conducts himself, his professionalism, how he leads his life…the players would give you all A-pluses there, as I would."

That may, or may not, be enough to win Shea Weber a Stanley Cup or a Norris Trophy, in that order. Weber has another whopping 11 years remaining on his pre-lockout front-loaded deal, so he has a lot of time left. If it doesn't happen, though, it won't be for a lack of talent…or humility for that matter. THN

KEEPING IT SIMPLE

RIELLY IS A NO-FUSS, NO-FRILLS KIND OF GUY AND A KEY BLOCK IN MAPLE LEAFS' REBUILD

BY MIKE BROPHY

THE NO. 1 SHORT-TERM goal of Brendan Shanahan is to improve the character on his hockey team. As president, he wants to build the Toronto Maple Leafs into a Stanley Cup contender, and strengthening the club's fortitude will accelerate the rebuild.

So it should come as no surprise that when the rebuild began, one name mentioned as "untouchable" was 21-year-old Morgan Rielly. For his part, Rielly is flattered but doesn't buy in. "You have to take it with a grain of salt," he said. "That's just a lot of people giving their opinion. There have been some great players traded over the years. The Edmonton Oilers traded Wayne Gretzky, so that proves any player can get traded."

Preparing for his third year in the NHL, Rielly is lying low in British Columbia. He's killing the reputation of entitled young pros earning big bucks who skip town two days after their team's season ends and head to exotic locations for a vacation. "Sorry about that," Rielly said. "I took a little time off from working out, but I've just been hanging out in Vancouver."

Rielly's plans for the summer are pretty modest: train for next season, spend time with friends and family and play golf. "You have to go to work every day and enjoy it," he said. "An aspect of that is having a good time and making some jokes and trying to keep it light. When it comes time to play games, you have to be ready, but in general we had some pretty good characters on the team who like to joke around, and that helps."

As for how people perceive him, Rielly said it's important they believe he's a hard worker with good character who cares about others and is committed to his job. "I'm a hockey player first," he said. "When it comes to hanging out with friends, often that takes a back seat to my job and my family."

Rielly's disposition and attitude toward his life and his career has been greatly influenced by his dad, Andy, who works in the lumber business as the owner of Rielly Lumber. "He has always had a huge influence on me, not only concerning hockey, but life in general," Rielly said. "He taught me lessons about life and how to carry myself off the ice. He thinks it's extremely important, and that has been instilled in me from a young age."

Andy said his son has always been focused on playing in the NHL and was willing to do whatever it took to get there. That meant leaving home at 14 to play for the Notre Dame Hounds in Wilcox, Sask., which was a tough sell to his mother, Shirley. Andy said his son actually takes after his mom in terms of being focused and driven. "Even when he played atom and peewee hockey he took it very seriously and put a lot of pressure on himself," Andy said. "Sometimes he relieves that when he's away from the rink by being humorous and playing practical jokes. It's a good release for him."

Rielly is grateful for everything his father has done for him. He taught him it is vital to be a good family member and he lives in fear of disappointing dad. "When you have to give your parents bad news, it's the worst feeling in the world," Rielly said. "When I am out and about, I always have that in the back of my mind. You have to make your own choices."

So it's extremely unlikely we'll see Rielly making headlines on TMZ any time soon. "I'm sorry I won't have anything more interesting to tell you," he said. "I'm a pretty normal guy who loves playing golf and hanging out with friends."

His handicap? "Right now, I am not at liberty to reveal that," he said. "Ask me again at the end of August. Usually I'm an eight, nine or 10."

Rielly was a multi-sport athlete growing up and feels bad for kids today who do nothing but play hockey. His other athletic pursuits included baseball, basketball and high school track.

Drafted fifth overall in 2012 after two years with the WHL's Moose Jaw Warriors, Rielly wasn't expected to make the Leafs in 2013-14, but he stayed with the team for the entire season, scoring two goals and 27 points in 73 games. He followed that up with eight goals and 29 points in 81 games last season.

It was obvious, right from the get-go, Rielly had NHL skating ability – a great combination of speed, acceleration and mobility. He doesn't hesitate to rush the puck out of the defensive zone and is quick to get back if there's a turnover. He also has a good head for the game, usually making quick and smart decisions. "He's still a young guy, but he's such a good player," said teammate Peter Holland "I think he's going to be an all-star in a couple of years. His skill is pretty evident. Everyone really respects his game throughout the league, and he's a good character guy in the room, too. He feels confident enough to speak up even a little bit now. It's great to watch him and I know he's only going to get better from here."

Part of getting better and being a face of a franchise is choosing your words carefully. Rielly found himself in hot water last season when he made a flippant comment during a scrum about his team's losing ways, saying, "We don't have to be girls about it." "I learned a lot from that," he said. "You have to watch what you say. If I could, I would take it back, but you have to learn from it."

Despite the learning curve, Rielly believes he can soon develop into a leader. "It's always on my mind," he said. "That's a job I want to have. I know I have only played two years, but I have had some great experiences. I want a leadership role. Being a leader on this team is one of my goals." THN

DUCKS WILL GET LAST QUACK

LOADED ANAHEIM SQUAD KNOCKED ON LORD STANLEY'S DOOR LAST SPRING AND WILL SIP FROM HIS MUG THIS TIME

BY MATT LARKIN

YOU'RE ONLY AS GOOD as what you almost did last year. At least, that's what the NHL's past two champions tell us. Each lost in the Western Conference final the year prior. The Los Angeles Kings fell to Chicago in 2013 and captured the Cup in 2014. Chicago lost to L.A. in 2014 and won it all in 2015.

Which team had its collective heart broken in Game 7 of the West final last spring? The Anaheim Ducks.

Orange County's mightiest franchise has flirted with the Presidents' Trophy as the league's most dominant regular season squad two years running. And for all the criticism coach Bruce Boudreau gets, he reached the third round for the first time last season. He's progressing, not regressing. Anaheim boasts a deadly tandem of centers in Ryan Getzlaf and Ryan Kesler, a mobile young blueline led by Hampus Lindholm and a swift forward corps with improving scorers like Jakob Silfverberg. Veteran additions Carl Hagelin and Chris Stewart up front and Kevin Bieksa on defense will be the final brush strokes of GM Bob Murray's Stanley Cup masterpiece. We like the Ducks for the Cup in 2016.

The road won't be easy, of course. Virtually everyone in the THN prediction room expects a surge from the Washington Capitals in the Eastern Conference. They boast the game's pre-eminent goal scorer in Alex Ovechkin, a big and well-rounded forward group and a deep defense unit helmed by John Carlson. Washington has a goaltending edge over most teams thanks to workhorse Braden Holtby. And the addition of Mr. Game 7, Justin Williams, will calm the Caps' jitters should they find themselves in another do-or-die situation.

The team that knocked them out last year, the New York Rangers, is primed for a small step backward. They've played a ton of hockey the past two years, reaching the final in 2014 and the conference final last season, and they lost more than they gained from their roster over the summer, most notably when Martin St-Louis retired. What about the Tampa Bay Lightning, whom we successfully predicted would reach the 2014 final? Their powerhouse roster remains largely intact, and the Atlantic Division looks like a cakewalk for them. They're Washington's top challenger.

The Columbus Blue Jackets threaten to shake up the East now that they're theoretically healthy after losing a league-high 508 man games in 2014-15. We believe their 12-0-1 run to end the year was no fluke, and trading for rising star Brandon Saad makes them scarier. The plucky Ottawa Senators have done nothing wrong, but they've also done almost nothing aside from re-signing their existing core. That's why we have the retooled Jackets nudging them out of the post-season picture. Hang on tight, Penguins. Phil Kessel brings a barrage of goals to Pittsburgh, but a shaky back end will have Sidney Crosby and Co. scrambling to play past April again.

The Pacific had more turnover than any other division this summer. The Edmonton Oilers are a brand new franchise, helmed by new GM Peter Chiarelli. Chiarelli also brought in goaltender Cam Talbot, defenseman Andrej Sekera and several other pieces to build around the franchise's savior, No. 1 overall pick Connor McDavid. Playoffs? Not yet, but expect the most relevant and competitive Edmonton squad in years.

Calgary looks primed to duplicate last season's surge after adding stud defenseman Dougie Hamilton to an already blossoming group. The Kings should hit back – hard – after shockingly missing the playoffs, with the directionless Vancouver Canucks sliding out of contention.

St. Louis and Chicago are staples at or near the top of the Central. If the rest of the division looks like we spun a wheel while blindfolded, that's about right. A margin thinner than dental floss separates Winnipeg, Dallas, Nashville and Minnesota. The Jets seem the safest bet of the bunch, as they led the NHL in puck possession last season and have a litany of uber-prospects ready to help. The Stars' aggressive off-season, in which they landed Patrick Sharp and Johnny Oduya from the Cup champs and inked goalie Antti Niemi, will force them up the standings. We're worried the cash-strapped Wild will sag simply because they couldn't tinker enough in hockey's deadliest division, where standing pat gets you killed.

Lastly, nowhere was our consensus stronger than in forecasting cellar dwellers Carolina, Arizona, Toronto and New Jersey. That quartet of teams belongs in its own tier of hopefuls for the No. 1 pick, likely Auston Matthews, in 2016. Note that we don't mention the Buffalo Sabres in that breath. Jack Eichel, Ryan O'Reilly, Evander Kane and new coach Dan Bylsma have them on the path to respectability. THN

FOURTH TIME THE CHARM?

THREE STRAIGHT HEARTBREAKING PLAYOFF EXITS HAVE TAKEN A TOLL, BUT THE DUCKS BELIEVE A CUP IS NEAR

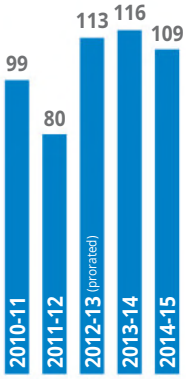
BY ERIC STEPHENS

VIEW THE ANAHEIM DUCKS THROUGH one prism and you see a regular season powerhouse that has moved one step closer to playing for the Stanley Cup over each of the past three years. View them through another and you see a would-be Cup contender fall short in each, taking 3-2 series leads, but then failing to close out teams and losing Game 7s at home. The pain from those playoff losses (Detroit in '13, L.A. in '14, and Chicago in '15) has only intensified. Whether it has made the Ducks even stronger or broken them has to play itself out over another 82-game push for the post-season.

GM Bob Murray responded to another playoff setback by making more changes to his roster. Some were made out of necessity, others out of desire. One change that wasn't made was to the bench boss. How long Bruce Boudreau remains in that position, however, will be determined by more high expectations that have to be met at last.

CORE PLAYER
Perry has 10 fruitful seasons under his belt in Anaheim.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE The Ducks went from the top scoring team in 2013-14 to 11th in 2014-15. Then they watched 22-goal scorer Matt Beleskey walk and dealt potential 20-goal scorers Kyle Palmieri and Emerson Etem.

Meanwhile, Getzlaf and Perry are now 30 and Ryan Kesler, who signed a six-year extension to stay with the Ducks, is 31. The three will remain the top scorers, but can they match the 78 goals and 172 points from last season?

The Ducks will need players like Jakob Silfverberg, Rickard Rakell and Jiri Sekac to generate more offense. Newly acquired Carl Hagelin is also a double-figure goal scorer, while UFA addition Chris Stewart adds punch and size on the wing.

DEFENSE Is it time for the Ducks to unleash Hampus Lindholm? In his first two seasons, the 21-year-old has been increasingly leaned on in all situations and seems poised to take the next step toward stardom. This group can use a true No. 1 on its back end.

HAMPUS LINDHOLM

Lindholm will no longer be mentored by Francois Beauchemin, who signed with Colorado. Murray replaced him with the right-shooting Kevin Bieksa, who still has some mileage left.

Cam Fowler played his best hockey in the 2015 playoffs and has formed a solid partnership with Simon Despres. And with veteran Clayton Stoner, puck-moving Sami Vatanen still has plenty of upside.

GOALTENDING Many assumed the much-hyped John Gibson would become the No. 1, but Frederik Andersen won the job from the outset and kept it while Gibson dealt with injuries. Andersen's numbers weren't stunning (2.38 goals-against, .914 save percentage), but his 35-12-5 record reflected his ability to make timely saves.

Murray traded for Carolina's Anton Khudobin and then stomped out rumors that Gibson was on the move. Khudobin's arrival could mean Gibson goes back to the AHL to stay sharp if Andersen falters.

SPECIAL TEAMS A plummeting power play contributed to assistant Brad Lauer losing his job. Improving it will likely be one of the tasks for new assistant coach Paul MacLean, the former Senators coach.

Vatanen's team-leading seven power play goals matched the combined output from Perry (four) and Getzlaf (three).

The middling penalty kill reflected its inconsistency. Hagelin and Andrew Cogliano give the Ducks two shorthanded threats.

INTANGIBLES Kesler grew into a leadership role as the season went on, and that figures to increase with Beauchemin moving on. The Ducks raved about Kesler's work ethic on and off the ice.

Hagelin's arrival and the projected increase in Sekac's role will inject even more speed into the lineup. Adding Shawn Horcoff provides another veteran who knows the playoff grind.

ROOKIES Don't expect a Calder Trophy candidate to emerge out of Anaheim. Recent on-ice success has resulted in few chances for the Ducks to draft ready-made NHL players.

Injuries could fast-track left winger Nick Ritchie or defenseman Shea Theodore, but the Ducks don't want to rush them.

X-FACTOR Freed from Michel Therrien's defense-oriented system in Montreal, Sekac showed occasional flashes of his speed and skill with Anaheim. His ice time will climb with Palmieri and Etem gone. Fifteen to 20 goals is possible.

THE BRASS Assistant coach Trent Yawney is back with new hire MacLean. Dallas Eakins will lead AHL San Diego. That's three former NHL coaches at Murray's disposal in case things go awry.

Boudreau was a more calming presence during the ups and downs last season, but he continues to fail in Game 7s.

DOG DAYS IN THE DESERT

A LOTTERY PICK FOR A SECOND STRAIGHT SEASON IS THE LIKELIEST OUTCOME FOR THE TRANSITIONING COYOTES

BY SARAH MCLELLAN

THE CLEANUP PROJECT IS IN FULL SWING, but after the Arizona Coyotes plummeted to 29th overall amid a 50-loss performance last season, this could be a lengthy process.

Their collapse triggered a rebuild that's guided by the hope the team can be a Stanley Cup contender in three to four years, but the Coyotes want to be competitive enough in the interim to still vie for a playoff spot.

They targeted experienced players in the off-season, while leaving opportunities open for youngsters, and have had to reconstruct their roster with their foothold in Glendale, Ariz., under scrutiny. The city tried to renege on its 15-year, $225-million arena management agreement with the team before the two parties agreed to a resolution in late July.

Arizona has a clear plan to repair the on-ice product, but the uncertainty surrounding the future has been an unfortunate footnote.

RAY OF HOPE
Ekman-Larsson is Arizona's shining star on the blueline.

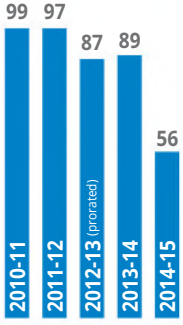
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE The Coyotes scored the second-fewest goals last season, and the by-committee philosophy will likely have to revive the offense. Oliver Ekman-Larsson led Arizona in goals after tying the franchise record for most in a season (23) by a defenseman while racking up a team-best 43 points.

Antoine Vermette returned after a February trade to the Blackhawks and qualifies as the team's No. 1 center. He put up 13 goals in 2014-15, and improving on that total would be a boost.

Expectations will be kept in check for 2014 first-rounder Max Domi, but he could also provide a spark to jumpstart the offense. The 20-year-old looks ready to make the leap to the NHL, and his skill could headline the group.

DEFENSE Even one of the Coyotes' usual strengths – stingy play in their own end – suffered last season as they ranked among the worst in goals against.

To adapt, the team added two stabilizing presences by acquiring

MIKE SMITH

Nicklas Grossmann via trade and re-signing Zbynek Michalek after trading him at the deadline to the Blues.

Ekman-Larsson remains the pulse of the unit, a responsible anchor with an eye for offensive openings, but the back end isn't as dynamic with Keith Yandle gone. He was shipped out ahead of the trade deadline to the Rangers, the first major move to signal the rebuild, and Arizona will miss his explosiveness offensively.

GOALTENDING Perhaps the most vital jolt to the Coyotes could come between the pipes, where No. 1 Mike Smith returns motivated to rebound from a disappointing showing. Smith struggled to anchor the team, at one point posting a sub-.900 save percentage, but he improved enough in the final few months to showcase his potential to again be this team's MVP.

SPECIAL TEAMS The power play continued to be an asset for the Coyotes, but much of that success relied on Ekman-Larsson working next to Yandle on the point. With Yandle gone, the unit will change, but Ekman-Larsson's vision and shot will still be catalysts.

Arizona took steps to improve the penalty kill, bringing in Boyd Gordon via trade and signing Brad Richardson to help steady the unit with his responsible style and speed.

A shutdown pairing featuring Grossmann should lead to better results.

INTANGIBLES The lessons from such a disastrous season shouldn't be discredited. Although the Coyotes aren't expecting to flip their fortunes in only a year's time, there should be plenty of fight from the likes of Smith, Ekman-Larsson and captain Shane Doan to prevent an encore.

Vermette will be key. The experience he gained from winning a Cup with the Blackhawks will be instrumental, especially for the young players.

ROOKIES Arizona has accumulated an appealing group of prospects, especially now that 2015 third-overall pick Dylan Strome is in the mix. Expect Domi to make the team and play a significant role.

Anthony Duclair, an explosive left winger who notched seven points in 18 games with the Rangers before being returned to junior last season, could also earn a spot.

X-FACTOR Wobbly goaltending played a big part in the Coyotes' recent plight, so a rejuvenated Smith has the most potential to revive this group.

THE BRASS GM Don Maloney has tried to assemble a bunch that can keep the Coyotes afloat until their prospects are ready to take over, and now it's up to coach Dave Tippett to organize the options. Duplicating their under-the-radar success of the past is the challenge that currently awaits them.

BOSTON BRUINS

ADAM MCQUAID

BRAND NEW BLUEPRINT

AFTER TAKING OVER IN MAY, GM SWEENEY SWIFTLY OVERHAULED HIS BRUINS. THEY ARE DIFFERENT, BUT ARE THEY BETTER?

BY MIKE LOFTUS

ON PAPER, IT DIDN'T LOOK SO BAD. Disappointing as it was to miss the playoffs after seven straight appearances, the Boston Bruins were just two points below the qualification line, and only five behind fourth place in the East.

But upper management, while acknowledging things like significant injuries, looked past what was on paper. GM Peter Chiarelli was fired after nine seasons, and by the time incoming GM Don Sweeney was through with the draft and free agency, eight players who spent all of 2014-15 in Boston were gone – core players Milan Lucic and Dougie Hamilton included.

The Bruins still return with decorated veterans such as Zdeno Chara, Patrice Bergeron and Tuukka Rask, but more important to Sweeney (and coach Claude Julien), there'll be a much different look up front, plus some long-sought salary cap flexibility.

NO. 1 C WITH D
As the B's top pivot, Bergeron competes in all three zones.

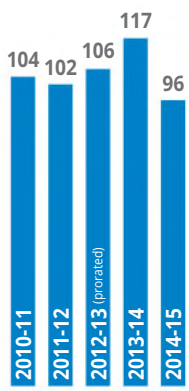
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Dropping from third to 22nd in offense is the primary reason the 2013-14 Presidents' Trophy winners missed the playoffs. Still to be seen is how trimming four of the seven players who reached 40 points (Hamilton, Lucic, Carl Soderberg and Reilly Smith) affects production.

Incoming wingers Matt Beleskey and Jimmy Hayes will make up some of the difference. A full season of David Krejci, as well as continued development from Ryan Spooner and David Pastrnak, is critical. Pastrnak, the NHL's youngest regular player last season, led Boston with 26 second-half points.

DEFENSE Overlooked amid the offensive dip was the 30 more goals allowed over the previous season. Primary causes were the cap-related trade of Johnny Boychuk, followed by injuries to Chara, Adam McQuaid and Kevan Miller.

Trading Hamilton, Chara's most consistent partner and the team's best puck-moving blueliner, leaves a major hole. Still, five full-timers return, and with three-time Selke Trophy winner Bergeron centering a shutdown line, team defense has a chance to return to form.

Sweeney rounded out the D-corps by signing Matt Irwin, 27, who played 17 minutes per game for the Sharks last season. He's suited for a depth role and can pitch in on special teams.

GOALTENDING Rask, the 2013-14 Vezina Trophy winner, played a career-high 70 games last year, many behind a battered defense. It was too much. After three straight years posting a 2.05 goals-against average or lower, the figure rose to 2.30.

Julien's lack of faith in since-departed Niklas Svedberg put more pressure on Rask, so the search is on for a suitable backup. Malcolm Subban, after two AHL seasons, and career minor-leaguer Jeremy Smith are the candidates.

SPECIAL TEAMS With Lucic, Hamilton, Soderberg and Smith gone, major changes loom for a power play that slipped from third to 17th. The days of Chara joining Lucic in front of the net are finished, but Krejci's return will be a boost.

The longtime duo of Bergeron and Brad Marchand, plus the Chris Kelly–Loui Eriksson tandem, should remain intact on the penalty kill, but departed vets Daniel Paille and Gregory Campbell must be replaced.

INTANGIBLES There's curiosity about how much the team's philosophy will change. Sweeney has cited the need to play an attacking style to boost offense and get up to the speed of today's NHL. He also wants more young players in the lineup.

This could pose a challenge for Julien. The roster doesn't have much more speed than before, and aside from Spooner and Pastrnak, the young forwards who got opportunities proved not to be ready.

ROOKIES It's relatively certain that a first-year NHLer will back up Rask. Fourth-line spots are plentiful, if players like Seth Griffith, Brian Ferlin and Alexander Khokhlachev are ready.

Joe Morrow and Zach Trotman, NHL auditions last season, have an opportunity to make the jump on defense. Colin Miller, part of the Lucic deal, could replace some of Hamilton's offense after a 52-point AHL season.

X-FACTOR The many new faces must mesh with holdovers for the Bruins to return to the post-season.

The leadership group (Chara, Bergeron, Krejci, Kelly) will carry more weight than in past years, when changes to a lineup that won the Stanley Cup in 2011 and reached the 2013 final were comparatively rare.

THE BRASS Sweeney's first off-season was interesting and heavily scrutinized. If the team is slow out of the gate, will he be patient with Julien, who waited several weeks to find out he'd be retained?

2015 NO. 1 DRAFT PICK

NAME

POSITION

SELECTED
13th overall

2014-15
Saint John (QMJHL)

SCOUTING REPORT
Overcame his first major injury (MCL) in what was otherwise an exemplary season in the 'Q.' The Czech national quickly put the fear in his opponents with his physicality, but he can also burn the competition with offense, too.

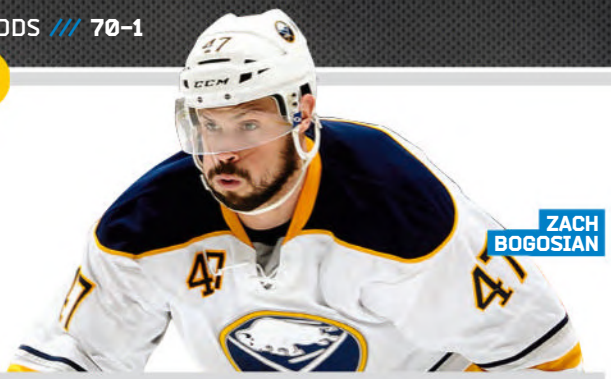
BUFFALO SABRES



HITTING THE JACKPOT

BUFFALO'S BRUTAL TWO-YEAR STRETCH IS OVER. NOW THE RABID FANS GET TO ENJOY THEIR REWARD: JACK EICHEL

BY JOHN VOGL

FROM 1979 TO 2009, 10 TEAMS drafted in the top two in back-to-back years. Five of them reached the Stanley Cup final within eight seasons, and three won it all. The Buffalo Sabres hope to join that list after two years of suffering.

Buffalo has selected second overall during the past two drafts, picking Sam Reinhart and then Jack Eichel. Both are expected to play center for a revamped lineup that looks nothing like the past two cellar dwellers. The Sabres will welcome Ryan O'Reilly, Evander Kane, Robin Lehner, David Legwand and Jamie McGinn to their roster.

Buffalo also has Dan Bylsma stepping behind the bench. "We've taken big strides," said GM Tim Murray. "Our players are excited, but I'm not going to put pressure on our players or coaches and say that we're a playoff team now. There's still a lot of uncertainty. Everything's new, and let's see how it all comes together in training camp."

No. 2 pick Eichel draws stylistic comparisons to Mario Lemieux.

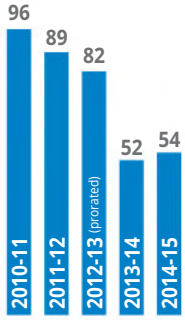
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE The Sabres have lacked a No. 1 center since Daniel Briere and Chris Drury departed in 2007. They fixed that in one day, acquiring O'Reilly from Colorado just minutes before drafting Eichel. The 24-year-old is excited to be a first-line player, and he can serve as a mentor to Eichel.

Buffalo was far and away the worst puck-possession team in the league, getting outshot by an average of 36-24. The big centers should allow the team to control play more often.

After a tumultuous stay in Winnipeg, Kane is eager to make the most of a fresh start. Matt Moulson is hoping to regain his 30-goal status.

DEFENSE Something clicked for Rasmus Ristolainen during the final 13 games. The 20-year-old, selected eighth overall in 2013, put up four goals and nine points while becoming steady in his own zone.

Zach Bogosian and Josh Gorges wore down while being overworked. The Sabres need to cut their minutes to a reasonable level.

Buffalo's only defensive option under ex-coach Ted Nolan was to collapse in front of the net and block the onslaught. With increased talent, Bylsma and assistant coach Terry Murray will be able to develop and execute a much better game plan.

GOALTENDING Lehner, acquired via trade from Ottawa, is out of the shadow of Craig Anderson. Tim Murray drafted the 23-year-old with the Senators and is confident Lehner can thrive as a No. 1 goalie. "Robin needed a change of scenery," Murray said. "He's a talented, big, strong young man who is just scratching the surface."

There is no fallback option. Chad Johnson is a career backup.

SPECIAL TEAMS With so many new faces on the ice and behind the bench, it will take time for the Sabres to find their footing.

Bylsma's teams in Pittsburgh excelled on the penalty kill, finishing in the top five three times during his five-year run. Zemgus Girgensons figures to be the workhorse up front.

Tyler Ennis, who's coming off a second straight 20-goal season, moved to the point on the power play late in the year for the first time in his life. His playmaking skills shone, so a return to that role is expected. After averaging nearly 10 power play goals per season, Moulson dipped to three. He strayed too far from the net and will need to get back to the dirty areas.

INTANGIBLES Late in the season, when it looked like the Sabres may climb out of last place and miss a guaranteed shot at Eichel or Connor McDavid, the home crowd began cheering for the visitors. Everyone is on the same team again. A winning mindset has replaced tank mode. Players like captain Brian Gionta can talk about how to be a pro rather than how to deal with draft talk.

ROOKIES Eichel became the face of the franchise the moment he was drafted. The hockey world watched in awe as he won the Hobey Baker Award as a freshman, recording 26 goals and 71 points in 40 games. He impressed for the United States at the World Championship, too, finishing third on the team with seven points in 10 games. "I'm sure I'll have 100 times more expectations," he said. "That brings out the best in me. I want to work to fulfill those expectations and exceed them."

X-FACTOR Bylsma's biggest chore will be finding chemistry with lines and defensive pairings. If the upgraded talent can mesh quickly, the team can make a big leap.

THE BRASS Tim Murray's aggressiveness and colorful vocabulary have endeared him to fans. They were prepared for a long rebuild, but his willingness to trade for big names has folks thinking anything is possible. At the very least, Murray has made the Sabres interesting again.

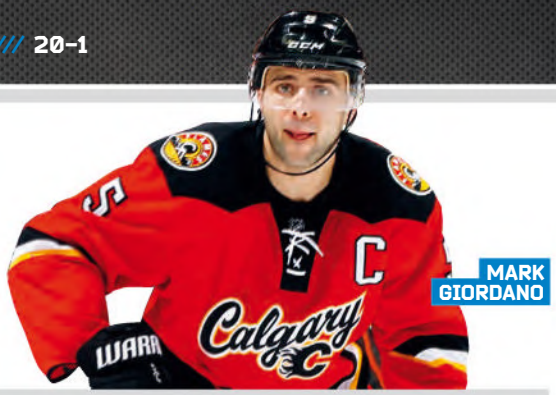
CALGARY FLAMES



MARK GIORDANO

TOWERING INFERNO

THEY SURPRISED THE NHL LAST SEASON, BUT NOW THE FLAMES FACE THE WEIGHT OF EXPECTATIONS. WILL THEY RESPOND?

BY RANDY SPORTAK

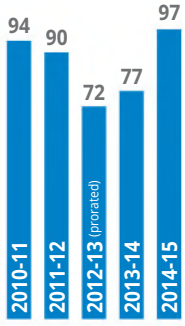
TWO SAY YEAR 2 OF THE Calgary Flames' rebuild went better than expected is an understatement. They were pegged by most to finish in the Connor McDavid sweepstakes, not make the playoffs and reach the second round.

Now comes the important assessment. How close are the Flames before they legitimately have a shot of sipping from Lord Stanley's mug and going for it? Is it two years? Five years? So far, management has been mostly patient, but it made one bold move over the summer, acquiring 22-year-old Dougie Hamilton from the Bruins to give the Flames another top-level defenseman. The Flames also signed right winger Michael Frolik, 27, in the hopes of shoring up the thin right side.

Hopes are high in the Stampede City to not fall back after taking a big step forward. The danger is the Flames getting too far ahead of themselves and not sticking to the rebuild that's working so well.

COMIN' IN HOT
Gaudreau tore up the West with his slick skills in '14-15.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Sean Monahan avoided a sophomore slump with a 31-goal campaign while diminutive rookie Johnny Gaudreau racked up 24 goals and 64 points. Those two, who combined with Jiri Hudler to lead the attack, are the cornerstones of the future up front and should only get better for a team that was surprisingly prolific.

The real key to Calgary's production, however, is the blueline, and adding Hamilton to a crew with Mark Giordano, T.J. Brodie and Dennis Wideman bodes well for a team that relies on an uptempo style.

DEFENSE After losing Giordano to a season-ending bicep injury with one-quarter of the campaign remaining, the expectation was the Flames would plummet. Instead, Brodie, Wideman and Kris Russell excelled while playing massive minutes, while Deryk Engelland stepped up from the third pairing and surprised everybody.

Putting Hamilton and a healthy Giordano into the fold gives Calgary one of the most complete six-packs in the NHL.

Want offense from the defense? Wideman, Giordano, Brodie and Hamilton each had more than 40 points, and Russell chipped in 34.

GOALTENDING Between Jonas Hiller, Karri Ramo and Joni Ortio, the goalies carrying one-way contracts, there is no legitimate No. 1. The good news for the Flames is that the revolving door of netminders worked out. Whenever one goalie faltered, another would step up. As a whole, Calgary's netminders finished in the middle of the league in goals-against average.

SPECIAL TEAMS The top line of Monahan, Gaudreau and Hudler had solid power play success. The three worked well with any combination of defensemen. Calgary's problem remains finding a second trio to click together. Hamilton provides another option on the blueline, but it's important the Flames find another forward combination that clicks. Rookie Sam Bennett could be key in that regard, but others must step up to take pressure off the Monahan unit.

Frolik will bolster the penalty kill, which ranked in the middle-third last season.

INTANGIBLES As demanding as coach Bob Hartley is of his players, he rewards them with a style of play that's fun. Sure, Hartley is maniacal with his fitness expectations, but the payoff was the team's third-period prowess last season – tied for the most goals (99) and 10 comeback victories. The Flames play with urgency regardless of the score.

ROOKIES Bennett, who missed most of last season because of shoulder surgery, joined Calgary after his junior season ended and was an immediate hit. The fourth overall pick in 2014 netted his first point on his first shift in the regular season finale and then collected three goals and an assist in 11 playoff games.

He'll be given every opportunity to be a top-nine forward as a center and winger and could very well be in the Calder Trophy conversation.

X-FACTOR Other than the Giordano injury, almost everything went in Calgary's favor last season. Most players had career years. Their team-wide shooting percentage was second-highest in the league. A step back is possible if the pendulum swings to the other side and all those bounces go against them.

THE BRASS Hartley deservedly won the Jack Adams Award for the first time in his career after guiding an underdog team to great heights, but the players earned their success by working as hard as he demanded. GM Brad Treliving has given his coaching staff more talent to work with but hasn't mortgaged the future in doing so.

SCOUTING REPORT
Had big skates to fill in Barrie with the exit of Aaron Ekblad, but Andersson managed to put up a good amount of points thanks to his power play prowess and puck skills. Footwork and quickness still have some catching up to do.

DESPITE MISSING THE PLAYOFFS SIX STRAIGHT SEASONS, GM FRANCIS STICKS WITH THE SLOW-AND-STEADY REBUILD

BY LUKE DECOCK

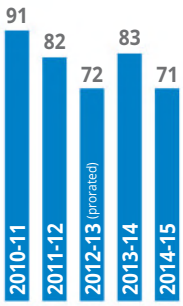
IN THE SPAN OF A WEEK, the Carolina Hurricanes went from a high of getting Noah Hanifin with the fifth-overall pick to a low of biting the bullet and spending $14 million to buy out Alexander Semin. It was a week that has the potential to be a turning point in Ron Francis' tenure as GM.

Other than hiring Bill Peters as coach, Francis spent most of his first season as GM evaluating. While he felt the Canes might have contended for a playoff spot if not for Jordan Staal's broken leg, he acknowledged changes were needed to a team that hasn't made the playoffs since 2009.

Francis still hasn't made any earth-shaking moves, as rumor-mill staples Eric Staal, Cam Ward and Jeff Skinner all stayed put through the draft. But the Semin buyout and the switch of backup goalies (Eddie Lack in, Anton Khudobin out) are immediate, short-term alterations. Francis continues to preach patience.

BIG BROTHER
The talent-thin Canes count on the elder Staal to lead the way.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Carolina has one elite offensive threat from the blueline: Justin Faulk. Beyond him and newly acquired James Wisniewski, talent is thin.

Their forwards have consistently underperformed, especially the highest-paid ones. Eric Staal, who's heading into the final year of his contract, had only 23 goals and hasn't scored 30 since 2011. Skinner scored just 18. Jordan Staal had only six in his half-season and Semin six in a full season. The Hurricanes need more from their top players – for as long as they're still around.

Elias Lindholm continues to develop into an impact forward and rookie Victor Rask was a pleasant surprise at center. Rask's defense is slightly ahead of his offense at this point in his career, but he was still fourth on the team with 33 points.

DEFENSE With Hanifin in the fold, the Hurricanes now have a trio of young defensemen they intend to build around. Faulk, only 23, is a potential Norris Trophy candidate, while the others – Hanifin and 2014 first-rounder Haydn Fleury – might still be a year or two away from making the team.

Carolina added Wisniewski to bolster the power play in the short term but will continue to rely heavily on Faulk and Ron Hainsey until the prospects are ready to assume major roles. Beyond that, there's a mishmash of depth guys with veteran John-Michael Liles and youngsters like Michal Jordan, Rasmus Rissanen and Ryan Murphy.

The Hurricanes looked at adding a free agent on the blueline, but they didn't want to add any long-term contracts that could block the progress of their prospects.

GOALTENDING Ward, now in the last year of his contract, is still trying to get back to his best hockey, though 2014-15 was a step in the right direction after he posted a career-best 2.40 goals-against average.

Carolina traded for Lack to push Ward and potentially succeed him. Lack is also in the final year of his contract and appears ready to be a No. 1 after getting stuck behind Roberto Luongo and Ryan Miller with the Canucks.

SPECIAL TEAMS Peters promised improved special teams when he took over, and he delivered. The power play moved up 15 spots from 2013-14, and the penalty kill was the Hurricanes' best since 2000-01.

Wisniewski's big, right-hand shot fills a major need on the power play, while Jay McClement and Hainsey will again play key roles on the penalty kill. McClement had the league's 12th-best faceoff percentage.

INTANGIBLES Eric Staal has come under harsh criticism for his leadership. Carolina hasn't made the playoffs in the six seasons he has been captain, but there's also a dearth of experienced players around him in the dressing room. The Hurricanes desperately need Faulk to emerge as a vocal leader as he enters the prime of his career.

ROOKIES Hanifin will be given every opportunity to make the team, but Carolina hopes two of its other top prospects, winger Brock McGinn and defenseman Brett Pesce, will challenge for spots in training camp.

X-FACTOR While the roster on paper isn't up to par in the Metropolitan Division, Francis likes to cite the team's high number of one-goal losses as a stat that could easily trend the other way. With Peters in his second season and Jordan Staal healthy for a full campaign, Francis sees potential for immediate improvement.

THE BRASS Francis was more assertive this summer than last, having used his first season to make assessments. His No. 1 priority is restocking the development system.

Owner Peter Karmanos continues to seek outside investment and could sell the team.

SCOUTING REPORT
Had an incredible freshman year for the Eagles and was still 17 until late January. A total package blueliner who can skate, put up points and defend, Hanifin may not be the most physical player on the ice, but he gets it done with smarts.

CHICAGO BLACKHAWKS

HOIST CUP, RINSE, REPEAT

THREE CUPS IN SIX YEARS FOR THE DYNASTIC BLACKHAWKS. NOW IT'S TIME TO RELOAD AND TAKE ANOTHER CRACK AT IT

BY MATT CARLSON

LESS THAN 48 HOURS AFTER the Chicago Blackhawks hoisted their third Stanley Cup in six seasons, GM Stan Bowman, coach Joel Quenneville and their partied-out players already were talking about what everyone knew was coming. "There are going to be some changes," Bowman said. "But that's the same for every team."

The Blackhawks' most formidable foe is the salary cap. With eight-year extensions kicking in for Jonathan Toews and Patrick Kane, Bowman had to make room for their $10.5-million cap hits. And he didn't waste any time doing it.

When Brandon Saad demanded $6 million annually, he traded him to the Blue Jackets in a seven-player deal. Then Patrick Sharp and his $5.9 cap hit followed him out the door when he was shipped to the Stars. Artem Anisimov and Trevor Daley were the centerpieces of the returns. Brad Richards and Johnny Oduya left via free agency.

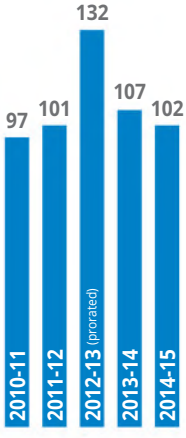
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE With three of their top-six forwards gone (Saad, Sharp and Richards), Chicago will rely on its young players to step up, especially Teuvo Teravainen. Just 20 years old, he made precocious contributions during the playoffs. "He showed some great signs – play recognition, patience, confidence with the puck," Quenneville said. "His skills set is high-end."

The feisty Ryan Hartman, a first-round pick in 2013, figures to be in the mix following a solid AHL season and a brief call-up. Quenneville will also have freshmen Kyle Baun and Russian Artemi Panarin at his disposal. Both signed as UFAs in the spring.

A key component in the Saad deal was Anisimov, who at 6-foot-4 gives the Blackhawks a big man in the middle behind Toews.

DEFENSE Puck possession plus structure equalled the No. 2 ranked defense in the NHL behind only the Montreal Canadiens.

The Blackhawks' top three defensemen are as good as any with Conn Smythe and two-time Norris Trophy winner Duncan Keith, along with Brent Seabrook and Niklas Hjalmarsson.

Daley is the new No. 4 defenseman. He replaces Oduya, who signed with Dallas as a free agent shortly after the Blackhawks brought in Daley in the Sharp deal with the Stars. Chicago needs Daley to find the kind of chemistry Hjalmarsson had with Oduya. He had a career year offensively with 16 goals and 38 points, but his defense is suspect. Being paired with Hjalmarsson should mitigate that.

On the bottom pairing, look for a healthy Trevor van Riemsdyk to earn a spot and David Rundblad to angle for a bigger role.

GOALTENDING Corey Crawford is the clear No. 1, backed up by Scott Darling. In backstopping Chicago to a championship for a second time, Crawford silenced his remaining critics and solidified himself as one of the NHL's clutch playoff goalies.

Darling's stellar season meant the end for Antti Raanta, who was dealt to the Rangers.

SPECIAL TEAMS Despite all their skill, the Blackhawks were back of the pack in the regular season with the man advantage. What usually works best is scrappy Andrew Shaw going to the front of the net and someone blasting through a screen from the blueline.

The penalty killing, led by Toews and Marian Hossa (who combined for three shorthanded goals), is tenacious and usually gets the job done.

INTANGIBLES The Hawks consistently adjust to any situation and don't get rattled. That's a big reason why they win.

They can grind out a tight game battle-by-battle, and manage leads impeccably. Chicago was 25-0-0 when leading after two periods during the regular season and 8-0 in the playoffs.

ROOKIES Teravainen is now a full-time NHLer and no longer Calder eligible. Hartman, Baun and Panarin lead this year's group of top Blackhawks rookies, followed by forwards Phillip Danault, Mark McNeill, Garret Ross and Ryan Haggerty.

X-FACTOR With their core still intact, Chicago should still be good – maybe even great again. There will be some ups and downs with all the roster changes and influx of youngsters, but the team expects to avoid another precipitous drop down the standings after purging its supporting cast.

THE BRASS Much of the core was assembled by former GM Dale Tallon, but Bowman has proven himself adept at managing both the talent and business side of a roster in the cap era.

Quenneville has three Cups in six years, too, and is gunning for a fourth. "I feel privileged and honored and thrilled that I walked in at the right time and things worked out the way they did," he said.

2015 NO. 1 DRAFT PICK

NAME

POSITION

SELECTED
54th overall

2014-15
Niagara (OHL)

SCOUTING REPORT
Helped Canada to bronze at the world under-18s after his IceDogs were bounced from the playoffs. Knott is a divisive prospect: those who like him see a big kid who can cycle the puck, while others knock his compete level.

MOUNTAIN CLIMBERS

WILL A BLOCKBUSTER TRADE AND MINOR CHANGES ON THE BLUELINE BE ENOUGH TO PROPEL THE AVS UP THE STANDINGS?

BY MIKE CHAMBERS

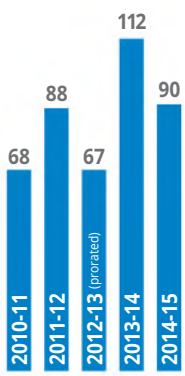
THE OFF-SEASON GOALS WERE clear: improve the depth, bolster the blueline and get tougher. The trade of Ryan O'Reilly to the Sabres in a six-player deal touched on all three needs for the Colorado Avalanche while making them younger and cap-flexible enough to lock in Erik Johnson, Tyson Barrie and Nathan MacKinnon to long-term extensions.

The key acquisition in the trade is Nikita Zadorov, 20, who is pegged to play with Barrie on the second pair on defense. The second major piece is 21-year-old Mikhail Grigorenko, formerly coached by Patrick Roy with the Quebec Remparts of the QMJHL. Both Zadorov and Grigorenko have mile-high potential. The O'Reilly trade was made a day after Colorado acquired Carl Soderberg to be their new second-line center.

Via free agency, the Avalanche also brought in Francois Beauchemin from the Ducks and Blake Comeau from the Penguins.

KEY 'KOG
Landeskog is the Avs' captain and a model of consistency.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Colorado was the only team with six 50-point scorers last season. They had scoring depth, but their top guys rarely got hot together.

In the first part of the season, nobody produced regularly, and the late-season scoring streaks by O'Reilly, Landeskog and Jarome Iginla weren't enough to overcome the slow start. Iginla had seven goals in his final 13 games to finish with a team-high 29.

The Avalanche expect MacKinnon to bounce back after a sophomore slump.

DEFENSE Beauchemin and Zadorov will help, but Colorado still must play a better brand of hockey when it comes to defensive zone exits and offensive zone entries, as well as the transition attack and defending the rush.

Too many times the Avalanche's primary breakout was to rim it around to a winger or go high and hard off the glass. They didn't regularly produce clean exits, particularly after Johnson sustained a knee injury in January and missed the rest of the season.

Beauchemin's age (35) says his puck-skating days are numbered at this level and it might be unfair to already suggest the youngster Zadorov is top-four material.

GOALTENDING Semyon Varlamov was a Vezina Trophy finalist in 2014, but he suffered through continuous groin issues last season. His health is concerning, since Reto Berra, acquired at the 2014 trade deadline, has not turned into the dependable backup Colorado envisioned. The team lost faith midway through the season and recalled third-year pro Calvin Pickard. Pickard, 23, is the undisputed second-best goalie in the organization, but Colorado has Berra under contract at $1.45 million annually through 2016-17 and would rather not pay him to play in the minors.

SPECIAL TEAMS The Avalanche had an unsightly power play last season, despite having excellent personnel. The O'Reilly-Duchene half-wall duo that was so effective in 2013-14 didn't click and was disbanded. Johnson, Barrie and Zach Redmond were good options at the point, but neither unit meshed. Soderberg and Grigorenko are two new options for Roy.

The penalty kill was one of the few bright spots in an otherwise disappointing season.

INTANGIBLES Two new assistant coaches should get more out of the defense.

As for leadership, Colorado will benefit with Beauchemin, a no-nonsense, high-demand veteran. Vets like Iginla, Brad Stuart and Alex Tanguay surround young captain Landeskog.

Roy, who won the 2014 Jack Adams Award as a rookie coach, will be a better bench boss after a humbling sophomore year.

ROOKIES Defensemen Chris Bigras and Mason Geertsen will play with the big club at some point, but Colorado has eight NHL-level D-men under contract, seven on one-way deals.

The club has three options for 2015 10th-overall pick Mikko Rantanen: Finland, AHL San Antonio or Colorado. The power forward might make the team.

In goal, Pickard's path depends on whether or not the Avs trade or buy out Berra.

X-FACTOR Colorado set a franchise record for man-games lost to injuries but is now bigger, tougher and deeper. The question is, are Beauchemin and Zadorov enough to improve one of the NHL's weakest bluelines?

THE BRASS Joe Sakic and Roy begin their third year together in Colorado. They are noticeably anxious to right the ship after following up their unexpected success in 2013-14 with a disappointing 2014-15. But many believe they didn't do enough to rebuild the blueline, and if defense wins championships, the Avalanche aren't close.

BLUE JACKETS

THE CANNON IS LOADED

THE JACKETS PACK A PUNCH, ESPECIALLY WITH FORMER HAWK SAAD IN THE FOLD. A BIT OF LUCK AND THEY'RE A CONTENDER

BY AARON PORTZLINE

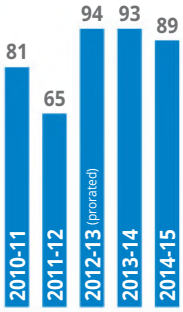
A HORRIBLE START AND AN UNCONSCIONABLE, season-long bout with injuries – more than 500 man-games lost – undermined the Columbus Blue Jackets' 2014-15 season, making them a post-season spectator yet again. But the 2015-16 edition is young, big and talented and expects to challenge for the Metro Division crown, right there with the Rangers, Penguins, Islanders and Capitals.

But the Blue Jackets don't just want to make the playoffs, they want to make some serious noise. The acquisition of Brandon Saad in a blockbuster trade with Chicago has boosted optimism, and will only make Columbus, with three powerful lines, harder to handle.

The defense remains solid but not special, though a return to health of 2012 No. 2-overall pick Ryan Murray would be a big boost. Murray is emblematic of this whole club. A giant asterisk hangs over the Blue Jackets, one that stands for "if healthy."

BOMBER JACKET
Towering pivot Johansen has a blistering shot in his arsenal.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Saad doesn't need to be a savior. He'll likely pair with Ryan Johansen and Nick Foligno, who were 1-2 in team scoring. Add Boone Jenner, Brandon Dubinsky, Scott Hartnell and Cam Atkinson to the mix, and you've got proven talent on three lines. Hartnell, who had 28 goals in 2014-15, figures to be a third-liner.

The wild cards up front are two reclamation projects: David Clarkson and Rene Bourque, who will have secondary roles after flaming out in previous stops.

If Murray can stay healthy, and if David Savard continues to emerge as a two-way talent, Columbus will get sufficient production from its back end. But the team lacks an established power play defenseman.

DEFENSE The Blue Jackets have to get out of their own way and get out of their own end this season. That was a noticeable struggle in 2014-15: they were forechecked into submission.

Part of it was, again, the injuries. The lineup was a patchwork mess on too many nights. At one point, $30 million of a $56-million payroll was on the shelf, including No. 1 goaltender Sergei Bobrovsky for two long stretches.

The Jackets, more skilled now than ever, must not lose their roots as a team that creates offensive chances from checking. And they can't rely so heavily on the top defensive pairing of Jack Johnson and Savard, who logged big minutes last season.

GOALTENDING Since winning the Vezina in 2013, Bobrovsky has been good, not great. He's gone back to his own off-season training program after sustaining groin injuries the past two seasons. As the NHL's second highest-paid goalie ($8.5 million) he'll be expected to carry the club on a regular basis. Curtis McElhinney returns as the backup.

SPECIAL TEAMS Columbus can't expect more from its power play, which was the best in franchise history last season. But there is cause to be wary of a repeat. There's no proven shooter on the point, not since James Wisniewski was traded in March. It could be a revolving door, with Alexander Wennberg getting a look.

The penalty kill stands as a great barometer for this group. When they are playing their style – gritty, heavy, ultra-competitive – they thrive shorthanded. Former Bruins fourth-line standout Gregory Campbell was signed as a UFA and perfectly fits the Jackets' mold.

INTANGIBLES Columbus will have its first captain since Rick Nash was traded in 2012. Nick Foligno, who has maintained his third-line persona, was granted the 'C,' edging out candidates like Jenner and Dubinsky. It'll be interesting to see how the room is run with a designated leader, but the players demanded it after three seasons with a committee approach.

ROOKIES It'll be hard for a rookie to crack the lineup unless injuries strike, but big things are expected of right winger Oliver Bjorkstrand, who lit up the WHL the past two seasons. Forwards Kerby Rychel, Josh Anderson and William Karlsson got a taste last season and mostly fared well.

X-FACTOR Despite the crush of injuries, Columbus made no changes to its training, medical or strength and conditioning staffs, putting all the blame on bad luck. GM Jarmo Kekalainen is emphatic the club's training regimen isn't responsible for the rash of abdominal injuries among players.

THE BRASS The tendency under coach Todd Richards has been slow starts followed by rabid finishes. The past three seasons, the Jackets' cumulative record in the first 20 games is 18-34-8. In the final 20, it's 41-15-4. Can Richards survive another slow start?

SHOOTING FOR SAVES

THEY HAVE PLENTY OF FIREPOWER, BUT DEFENSE AND GOALTENDING STAND BETWEEN THE STARS AND THE PLAYOFFS

BY MIKE HEIKA

GM JIM NILL PUT a lot of his eggs into the goaltending basket this off-season, and for good reason.

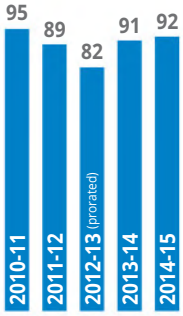
The Dallas Stars were tied for 26th in goals against with 257 and 29th in save percentage at .895, and the advanced stats indicate the main issues were between the pipes.

So Nill targeted 32-year-old Finnish netminder Antti Niemi and signed the former Cup winner to a three-year contract at $4.5 million per season. Add that to the $5.9-million cap hit for Kari Lehtonen, and the Stars have the most dollars dedicated to goaltending in the NHL. Nill hired goalie coach Jeff Reese (12 years of experience in Tampa Bay and Philadelphia), and gave him the task of handling this two-headed monster.

As if the NHL's second-ranked offense wasn't potent enough, Nill brought in Patrick Sharp to augment it. If Dallas can keep pucks out and its offensive weapons continue to fire, a playoff spot is attainable.

NO. 1 GUN
Seguin has been an offensive force since landing in Dallas.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Dallas trailed only Tampa Bay in offense and has plenty of weapons.

Jamie Benn won the Art Ross Trophy with 87 points and could be even better after having surgery on both hips. Tyler Seguin has 161 points over 151 games in his time with the Stars. Jason Spezza and Ales Hemsky each are hoping to see improvement after transition seasons. And Valeri Nichushkin is getting ready for his third NHL season after missing almost all of 2014-15 with hip surgery.

Bottom line, the Stars could actually be better offensively.

DEFENSE This is where things get sketchy. Dallas has missed the playoffs six of the past seven seasons and has had Alex Goligoski and the now-traded Trevor Daley leading the team in minutes for most of that stretch. There's been a strong drumbeat from the fan base to get a No. 1 defenseman, but the search has been fruitless.

Nill did bolster the 'D' by signing Johnny Oduya, who played a top-four role on the Cup-winning Blackhawks. He averaged 20 reliable minutes in a shutdown role and was a mainstay on the penalty kill.

John Klingberg is expected to step into bigger minutes after playing 21:50 a game and tallying 40 points in 65 games as a rookie. Patrik Nemeth also could see his time on ice increase from 16:12 after missing most of last season with an arm laceration.

GOALTENDING Lehtonen and Niemi have been among the leaders in minutes played for the past six seasons, averaging close to 60 games. Splitting time could be a challenge for the Finnish duo, but Nill said he believes that having each fresh will be a key to improvement. Still, Reese and coach Lindy Ruff have a real juggling act ahead of them. Keeping both goalies happy and pushing the right buttons will be challenging.

SPECIAL TEAMS Dallas morphed into one of the best power play teams by the end of the season. The Stars ranked second in opportunities (290) and fifth in goals (55).

Klingberg's presence on the point became a big part of the team's success, but the trio of Seguin, Benn and Spezza really drove the attack.

The penalty kill still needs work, as it was 18th in goals against. Oduya's experience will help. The team has gone from 27th in faceoff success two years ago to eighth last season.

INTANGIBLES Ruff is pushing an aggressive mindset, and the Stars are one of the league's speediest teams, so they can lose structure at times. That's especially important if you believe their group of defensemen is below average. Ruff pulled on the reins in the second half of the season, but the key for success is finding the proper balance between attacking and defending.

ROOKIES After flooding the team with Klingberg, Nemeth, Jyrki Jokipakka, Brett Ritchie and Curtis McKenzie, the Stars will be lighter on rookies. Esa Lindell and Julius Honka are still a year away on 'D,' while Jason Dickinson, Radek Faksa and Devin Shore are knocking on the door as depth forwards.

X-FACTOR There's a real curiosity as to what Nichushkin can do. He had 14 goals and 34 points in 79 games as a rookie two seasons ago, but he played only eight games last season and managed just a single assist. He is 20 now and will play with skilled teammates. This could be a breakout season.

THE BRASS The Stars believe they have one of the best GMs in Nill and will give him a lot of room to build the team. But with Ruff entering the third year of his four-year contract, the pressure is going to be high. Dallas needs a quick start or talk of change behind the bench will come quickly.

RED WINGS

THE STREAK GOES ON

BABCOCK DEPARTS HOCKEYTOWN AFTER A DECADE OF SUCCESS, BUT THE WINGS' WINNING CULTURE REMAINS INTACT

BY BOB DUFF

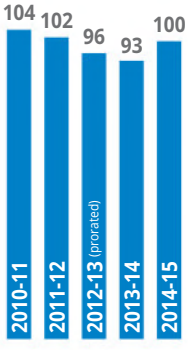
FOR THE FIRST TIME IN A DECADE, there's a new man in charge of the Detroit Red Wings.

Before former coach Mike Babcock found 50 million reasons to accept the challenge of turning around the Toronto Maple Leafs, the Red Wings gave Jeff Blashill 200,000 reasons a year earlier to wait for his NHL chance. That's the number of dollars they paid him to turn down the chance to interview for other NHL jobs and stay an extra year as coach of Detroit's AHL farm club in Grand Rapids. "I'm good friends with Mike (Babcock), and I knew there was uncertainty around his position," Blashill said. "When I talked to Ken (Holland), I told him if there was one team in the NHL I had an opportunity to coach, it would be the Detroit Red Wings."

A Michigan native and a college goalie, Blashill is the first American and first former netminder to coach the Wings.

HEAD WING
Detroit has plans to deploy Zetterberg on Datsyuk's flank.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Detroit bought out the disappointing and injury-prone Stephen Weiss and hope by signing Brad Richards that he'll be the solution to the No. 2 center position.

Several Wings enjoyed career years, led by Tomas Tatar's 29 goals. Justin Abdelkader (23), Darren Helm (15), Riley Sheahan (13) and Luke Glendening (12) also trended upwards. Gustav Nyquist (27) was one goal shy of his personal best but was still second on the team in goals.

On the flip side, captain Henrik Zetterberg scored just twice in his last 29 games, and Pavel Datsyuk missed 19 games due to a variety of injuries. He underwent off-season ankle surgery and his status for the start of the season is uncertain.

DEFENSE Mike Green got a three-year, $18-million pact, and the Wings are anticipating he'll bolster what's been a moribund back end in terms of productivity. Niklas Kronwall (44 points) was the only Detroit D-man among the NHL's top 40 in scoring. Green isn't the guy who put up 31 goals and 73 points in 2008-09, but his 45 points last season would have led the Wings' defense.

Blashill intends to pair the defensively suspect Green with ultra-reliable Danny DeKeyser, dropping Kyle Quincey to the third pair. Detroit is anxious to see how Jakub Kindl performs without regular trips to Babcock's doghouse. The hope is one of Nick Jensen, Xavier Ouellet or Alexey Marchenko makes the team out of camp.

GOALTENDING There's a battle for the No. 1 role, and that's exactly the elixir Jimmy Howard needs. Howard was headed to the All-Star Game when a groin injury derailed his momentum. He wasn't the same goalie when he returned, and rookie Petr Mrazek won his job for the playoffs. Howard steps up when challenged and the Wings will head to camp with two capable goalies.

SPECIAL TEAMS The additions of Richards and Green will boost one of the NHL's best power plays. But the key was getting assistant coach Tony Granato to stay on as Blashill's right-hand man. He was the mastermind behind the Wings' power play in his first season with the team.

Jim Hiller, who left with Babcock for Toronto, ran the penalty kill, which was among the league's best much of the season before plummeting to 17th by season's end.

INTANGIBLES In Detroit, the culture starts with core leaders Zetterberg, Datsyuk and Kronwall, who set the example in the room. "If your best aren't competitive workers that lead the way, I don't think you have a chance to win at the highest level," Blashill said. "I know guys that have been traded here are like, 'Wow, I can't believe how hard 'Z' works every day, how hard 'Pav' works every day.' "

ROOKIES Winger Teemu Pulkkinen has done everything possible at the minor league level, scoring 65 goals the past two seasons in the AHL. But that production hasn't transferred yet to the NHL, with just five goals in 34 games. It's make-it-or-break-it time for him.

X-FACTOR The last time Detroit hired a coach without previous NHL playing or head coaching experience was Nick Polano in 1982.

Blashill is well known to Detroit's veterans, who worked under him as an assistant to Babcock in 2011-12, and to 15 other players who skated for him in Grand Rapids. It should be a fairly smooth transition.

THE BRASS Blashill shares many of the same philosophies as his predecessor, but he insists he isn't going to just be Babcock-lite. "I'm my own person in how I deal with players and how I deal with things on a daily basis," Blashill said. "I'll be Jeff Blashill, and I think in that there will be change."

2015 NO. 1 DRAFT PICK

NAME
Evgeny Svechnikov

POSITION
Right winger

SELECTED
19th overall

2014-15
Cape Breton (QMJHL)

SCOUTING REPORT
Seen as a Rick Nash-style power winger, Svechnikov is a skill player in a big body who can fool players 1-on-1 and then snap a quick shot past the goalie. When the Screaming Eagles needed a center late in the season, he filled in.

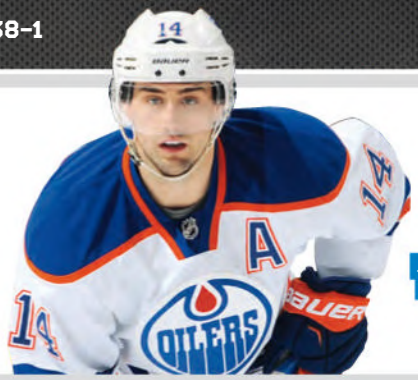
EDMONTON OILERS



JORDAN EBERLE

CONNOR AND HIS DISCIPLES

VISIONS OF GRETZKY AND THE GLORY DAYS OF THE 1980S HAVE OILERS FANS SALIVATING FOR MCDAVID'S ARRIVAL

BY ROB TYCHKOWSKI

THE EDMONTON OILERS HAVE been trying for nine years now to break the cycle of misery and failure that makes them a perennial lottery team with virtually zero success.

They were worse last year than they were eight seasons ago.

So, instead of blowing up the roster, the Oilers went a different direction this summer – blowing up the guys in charge of building the roster. In a dramatic and relentless gutting, the Oilers' president of hockey operations, GM, coach, three assistant coaches, head pro scout and head amateur scout were among those replaced.

After six coaches in seven years, the Oilers signed Todd McLellan to a five-year deal. After Kevin Lowe, Steve Tambellini and Craig McTavish all showed inexperience during stints as GM, they hired Peter Chiarelli. And in the biggest – and luckiest – move of all, they won Connor McDavid in the draft lottery. So, yes, the fans in Edmonton are very excited.

TAYLOR MADE

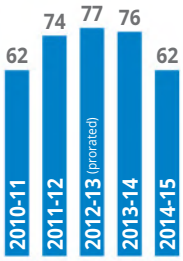
TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Despite all the young skill they've been harvesting with high draft picks all these years, the Oilers have always struggled for offense. They've lacked depth at center and determination around the net, as well as puck-moving defensemen and quarterback the power play.

Some of those areas still need to be addressed, but the addition of McDavid, widely regarded as the best player to hit the NHL since Sidney Crosby, is bound to help. How much he can deliver in his rookie season remains to be seen, but he will definitely have a positive impact. And if he can make the players around him better, that will help, too.

DEFENSE Of all the Oilers' weak links, defense has always been the weakest. No surprise, then, that new management added three new rearguards in Andrej Sekera, Eric Gryba and 2012 fourth-overall pick Griffin Reinhart. Darnell Nurse (seventh overall in 2013) is also expected to make push for a roster spot. Replacing more than half their blueline will make a difference, but there are still question marks.

Sekera is key. Can he be what the Oilers expect him to be: a top-pairing guy who chews up 25 hard minutes a night? And can Justin Schultz, who is expected to be a focal component, rebound after taking a big step backward?

GOALTENDING Management addressed another major area of concern when they traded for Rangers backup Cam Talbot with the intention of making him the starter. The Oilers weren't happy with the inconsistency of Ben Scrivens, and they hope Talbot – who played brilliantly when Henrik Lundqvist was injured and went 21-9-4 with a 2.11 goals-against average and .926 save percentage overall – can carry the load.

SPECIAL TEAMS The new coaching staff is expected to make a major difference on a power play that simply died under former coach Dallas Eakins. The Oilers' power play was eighth when Eakins arrived, dropped to 21st at the end of his first season and fell to the bottom of the league at 12.9 percent when they fired him mid-December. Interim coach Todd Nelson brought it back to life, getting it to 17 percent and 19th overall by the end of the year. A new coaching staff, the addition of a puck-mover in Sekera and the arrival of McDavid will make a major difference.

INTANGIBLES The Oilers haven't had a lot of intangibles over the past few years. Their ability to handle third-period pressure and rebound from early deficits hasn't been good.

Grit and toughness have also been in short supply. Not much has been done to improve the team in those areas. Despite all of the off-season changes, the Oilers are still a losing organization that must learn to win.

ROOKIES McDavid will have an immediate impact, obviously. The Oilers have never had a player win the Calder Trophy, and he might be the first. Nurse is knocking on the door and should be ready this fall. He'll definitely be an NHL player in short order.

X-FACTOR There hasn't been this much excitement heading into a season in Edmonton in 25 years. Expectations are high, probably too high for a 28th-place team. McDavid, McLellan and Chiarelli have fans thinking playoffs for the first time since 2006 – but that's a tall order given the ground they need to make up.

THE BRASS It's all new. CEO Bob Nicholson dismantled the old boys club and replaced everyone with experienced hockey minds who have track records of success. The Oilers have changed the way they do things at the top and the franchise is better for it.

Erie (OHL)

SCOUTING REPORT
The most anticipated prospect from the draft since Sidney Crosby, McDavid is a devastatingly creative center with the speed and hands to match. Simply put, he pulls off moves that most players don't even dream of. And he's driven.

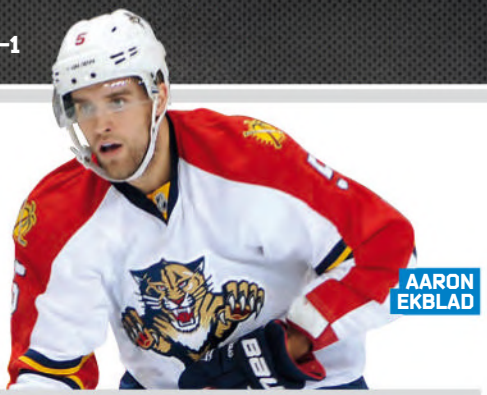
FLORIDA PANTHERS



AARON EKBLAD

ON THE PROWL

THE CORE PIECES ARE IN PLACE FOR THE PANTHERS, WHO CONTINUE THEIR QUEST FOR A PLAYOFF SPOT IN THE ATLANTIC

BY GEORGE RICHARDS

AFTER FINISHING AT OR NEAR THE BOTTOM of the standings in consecutive seasons, the Florida Panthers took a step forward last season and were in the playoff race down the stretch. They brought in Jaromir Jagr before the trade deadline to mentor the kids, then signed the veteran to a new contract as he and youngsters Aleksander Barkov and Jonathan Huberdeau meshed as a top scoring line. Only defenseman Brian Campbell remains from the roster rebuild GM Dale Tallon started in 2011.

The Panthers believe – really, this time – they are a playoff team and are ready to become one of the top teams in the league. They have plenty of promising young players, including a dynamic 1-2 punch at center with Barkov and Nick Bjugstad. With all that young blood bolstered by a solid group of veterans, Florida has the pieces in place to snag a playoff spot in the Atlantic, arguably the NHL's weakest division.

COCKY CAT
Jagr thinks the Panthers are legitimate Cup contenders.

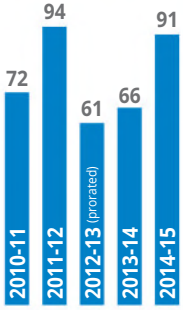
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Florida feels it can roll four quality lines. Barkov centers the top trio with Jagr and Huberdeau. On the second line, rising star Bjugstad (who signed a six-year deal mid-season) should center Brandon Pirri and former Bruin Reilly Smith.

Dave Bolland and Derek MacKenzie center the bottom two lines with Jussi Jokinen, Vincent Trocheck, Shawn Thornton, and rookies Rocco Grimaldi and Quinton Howden filling out the wings.

Veterans Tomas Kopecky, Scottie Upshall and Brad Boyes weren't brought back, as Tallon wants his young players to play more significant roles.

DEFENSE One of Florida's strengths was its defensive play. Pairing Campbell with rookie Aaron Ekblad proved to be a great decision – Ekblad was terrific and won the Panthers their second Calder Trophy in three years (Huberdeau in 2013).

Dmitry Kulikov had his best season since joining Florida as an

ROBERTO LUONGO

18-year-old in 2009. Teaming him up with veteran Willie Mitchell was another strong decision by the coaching staff.

Erik Gudbranson and Alex Petrovic make for a strong third pairing. Steven Kampfer, Dylan Olsen and rookie Mike Matheson give the Panthers options and depth on the blueline.

GOALTENDING A full season with Roberto Luongo back in Sunrise kept the Panthers in just about every game. He ended up with a .921 save percentage, his best since winning 38 games with Vancouver in 2010-11. Luongo and backup Al Montoya both missed time after being injured in the same game against Toronto in March, but Dan Ellis stepped in and kept the Panthers going. Ellis left as a free agent, so rookie Sam Brittain and Mike McKenna will start in AHL Portland and vie to be the big club's third option.

SPECIAL TEAMS Florida's power play was much improved, almost by default. In 2013-14, the Panthers set a franchise record for fewest power play goals with just 27, finishing last in both special teams categories. Last season, Florida scored 40. Ekblad and Pirri each had seven of them.

The penalty kill was also improved thanks in large part to the additions of MacKenzie, Ekblad, Bolland and a much-improved Kulikov.

INTANGIBLES The Panthers will be younger and quicker. Tallon replaced the bulk of Hayes with the speed of Smith, and few are as elusive as the 5-foot-6 Grimaldi.

Leaders with championship credentials in Mitchell, Thornton and Bolland have helped change the culture. The Panthers believe they are now a playoff team, and with so much new blood, the franchise's losing history isn't discussed much.

ROOKIES With Jimmy Hayes traded to the Bruins, towering left winger Lawson Crouse could find his way onto the team after being picked 11th overall in June.

Florida will give opportunities to a number of its youngsters, most notably Grimaldi and Howden. D-man Mike Matheson, Florida's top prospect the past few years, left Boston College early last season and joined AHL San Antonio.

X-FACTOR The Panthers will be younger – even with 43-year-old Jagr in the lineup – as veterans Kopecky, Upshall and Boyes won't return. If Florida's youngsters continue to progress, the post-season will be within reach.

THE BRASS Owners Vinnie Viola and Doug Cifu have given Tallon the resources to turn the Panthers into a contender. The team is well above the cap floor and trending in a positive direction. This will be the third season under Florida's latest ownership, and they expect to make the playoffs.

SCOUTING REPORT
He fell a bit based off pre-draft rankings, but Florida was more than happy to take the two-way power forward. His scoring upside is a question mark, but Crouse is a nasty customer who can also kill penalties effectively.

LOS ANGELES KINGS

REGAINING THE THRONE

AFTER OFF-ICE DRAMA SPOILED THEIR SEASON, CAN THE KINGS ONE-UP THE HAWKS WITH A THIRD CUP IN FIVE YEARS?

BY DOUG WARD

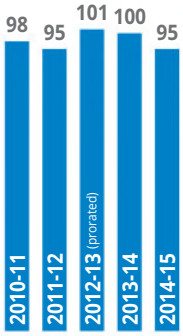
AFTER BECOMING THE FIRST defending Stanley Cup champion since the 2006-07 Hurricanes to miss the playoffs, the Los Angeles Kings will be highly motivated in 2015-16. Raising a third banner in five years would surpass the Blackhawks' run of three in six years and make the Kings a modern-day dynasty.

The addition of power forward Milan Lucic puts the Kings in position for a revival, providing they can absorb the departures of Justin Williams and Jarret Stoll and the potential loss of Slava Voynov.

GM-president Dean Lombardi has managed the salary cap adequately, but other off-ice wrinkles must be ironed out. Voynov spent his summer serving a 90-day jail sentence after pleading no contest to a misdemeanor count of corporal injury to a spouse, while a cocaine bust coincided with the departure of Stoll. Mike Richards' contract was terminated for a "material breach," although a battle with the NHLPA likely ensues.

KEEP AWAY
Kopitar remains one of the NHL's best in puck possession.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Under coach Darryl Sutter, puck possession has become the team's hallmark, with Anze Kopitar, Jeff Carter and Marian Gaborik all wizards in that regard. To contend, L.A. will need continued scoring from Kopitar, Carter and Gaborik, and a return to form from Dustin Brown, who scored only 11 times in 2014-15.

Physical play from Lucic, a healthy Tanner Pearson, and the continued emergence of Tyler Toffoli are also imperative.

Drew Doughty and Jake Muzzin combined for 87 points, providing a consistent offensive threat from the blueline.

DEFENSE Norris Trophy finalist Doughty led the NHL in total ice time, and Muzzin is coming off a breakout season. The Kings continued their air-tight defense, tying for fourth in goals allowed, but they weren't nearly as stingy as their league-best 2.05 goals-against per game in 2013-14.

JONATHAN QUICK

retired Robyn Regehr and rental Andrej Sekera create challenges. A healthy Alec Martinez and the continued development of Brayden McNabb will help lighten the loads on Doughty, who played 30-plus minutes 30 times, and Muzzin.

GOALTENDING Jonathan Quick (72 games, 36 wins, a .918 save percentage and six shutouts) remains a workhorse. In a season that ended without a payoff, he managed to enhance his reputation as a money goaltender by allowing two-or-fewer goals in 10 of his last 11 games during Los Angeles' futile fight for a post-season berth. Quick, however, must be better in shootouts after going 2-7 with a woeful .593 save percentage. Jhonas Enroth steps in as his understudy.

SPECIAL TEAMS The power play ranked 11th overall, well up from the previous season when it ranked 27th. The penalty kill betrayed the Kings, however, as it dipped from 2013-14. One bright spot was Toffoli, who emerged as a top penalty killer, leading the NHL with five shorties.

INTANGIBLES With the taint of two high-profile arrests and Richards' situation hanging heavy in the air, leadership is going to be critical to steady the ship. And Los Angeles has it from top to bottom: Lombardi personifies his working class hometown of Ludlow, Mass. Sutter is an Alberta cattle farmer. Brown, of Ithaca, N.Y. is a picture of stability. And Kopitar exudes the work ethic that has made him one of the best two-way players in the game.

Those salt-of-the-earth sensibilities will be essential in toning down the external perception of internal strife.

ROOKIES Nick Shore (technically a sophomore after playing in 34 games) and Andy Andreoff will get opportunities as third- and fourth-line centers. Derek Forbort, who has a nice reach but needs to be more physical, could help fill the void on the blueline.

X-FACTOR The Kings must improve in shootouts and on the road. Thanks to the introduction of 3-on-3 overtime, they'll find themselves in fewer shootouts, so that problem could solve itself.

After playing a record 64 post-season games in the previous three seasons, Los Angeles looked like a team worn down by its grinding style. A much-needed full summer of recovery will allow the Kings to hit the ground running in October.

THE BRASS Lombardi, whose emphasis on loyalty has both paid dividends and exacted a toll, worked salary cap magic in obtaining Lucic.

After Sutter was locked out of the dressing room by the players, there was concern the Kings had tuned him out, but guiding the club to two Cups remains the most resonant item on the coach's resume.

MINNESOTA WILD

DEVAN DUBNYK

WESTERN WILD CARD

SUPERHUMAN GOALTENDING SAVED THE WILD LAST SEASON. IN 2015-16 THEY'LL NEED A COMPLETE EFFORT TO SUCCEED

BY MICHAEL RUSSO

ALL SUMMER, GM CHUCK FLETCHER SAID how excited he was to return with essentially the same Minnesota Wild team. Of course, he had no choice. Lacking cap space thanks to long-term veteran deals and being stuck with once-again-injured, $4-million third goalie Niklas Backstrom, Fletcher had to limit his off-season moves to re-signing Devan Dubnyk, Mikael Granlund and bringing back familiar depth players. The Wild's only addition was highly touted college free agent defenseman Mike Reilly, the 22-year-old who led the University of Minnesota in scoring.

On the back of Dubnyk, Minnesota went 26-6-2 during one stretch and didn't lose consecutive regulation games in the final 40. The Wild hope they won't have to claw for a playoff spot and can overcome Chicago, which has eliminated them three straight years. The club needs Granlund and Charlie Coyle and many underperforming vets to be better.

ZACH ATTACK

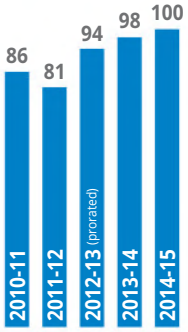
TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Relentless Zach Parise leads the way. Despite an excruciating season in which he lost his father, J.P., Parise scored 33 times. Jason Zucker broke through with 21 goals in 51 games and Nino Niederreiter scored a career-high 24. Veterans Mikko Koivu (48 points), Jason Pominville (18 goals) and Thomas Vanek (21 goals) didn't produce up to par.

Minnesota finished 12th in goals per game because of impressive balance, but Granlund, for a guy playing with Parise and Pominville, needs to improve on eight goals (second year in a row) and 39 points. The Wild also want more from Coyle, who shows glimpses of greatness some nights.

DEFENSE This will always be the Wild's bread and butter as long as Mike Yeo is at the helm and Koivu is captain. Minnesota boasts a mobile blueline with Ryan Suter, Jonas Brodin, Marco Scandella, Jared Spurgeon, Matt Dumba and now Reilly. Scandella, Spurgeon and Dumba combined for 28 goals.

RYAN SUTER

Disciplined and defensively structured, the club allowed the sixth fewest goals and fourth fewest shots. Not bad for a team that got horrific goaltending for six weeks before acquiring Dubnyk.

Minnesota lost checking center Kyle Brodziak in free agency, so it will need a rebound year from young center Erik Haula, who suffered through a sophomore slump and was trapped in Yeo's doghouse.

GOALTENDING Dubnyk was a one-man show in the second half. After arriving from the Coyotes on a Phoenix-to-Buffalo red-eye, he opened with a shutout over the Sabres, the first of 38 consecutive starts. One extended losing streak would have been insurmountable, but Dubnyk won 27 games (15 on the road) and gave the Wild stability in net they hadn't had in years. His sensational second half earned him a Masterton Trophy for perseverance, made him a Vezina finalist and landed him a six-year, $26-million deal.

SPECIAL TEAMS Ranked 27th on the penalty kill in 2013-14, the Wild leapt to first. Losing Brodziak hurts, but Dubnyk, the blueline and Haula are back.

Now the team must remedy an awful power play. Improvement starts with deployment. Yeo has a habit of starting an all-vet, underperforming No. 1 unit, and Fletcher wants to see more of the youngsters. For instance, Zucker had 43 minutes of power play time all season.

Suter, Koivu and Pominville all had tough years on the power play and must be better.

INTANGIBLES Minnesota takes on Parise's personality, built on work ethic and speed. As teams in the cutthroat Central Division get better, it's incumbent on the vets to keep up. The majority had disappointing years last season.

ROOKIES The Wild did beat the Blackhawks at something: the Reilly sweepstakes. He led all NCAA defensemen in scoring, and his offensive and skating abilities are elite.

Iowa Wild leading scorer Tyler Graovac will also be given every chance to make the squad.

X-FACTOR Dubnyk. Will he return to the mean with the comfort of a scrumptious contract or will he continue to be the cool, calm goalie that fit in perfectly last season? He showed some cracks in the Chicago series, and the Wild have proven that with its defensive structure, it just needs its goaltender to be above average, not great, to succeed.

THE BRASS The hope is Yeo can avoid the annual mid-season hot seat by getting off to a great start and sustaining it. The Wild needed near-miraculous second halves the past two seasons to save his job.

Yeo is a bright, young coach, but critics feel he too often defers to veterans. The growth of this team is reliant on him giving more opportunities in critical situations to his young players.

SCOUTING REPORT
A prodigious goal scorer in Sweden's junior ranks, Eriksson Ek spent a slight majority of his season battling men in the SHL. With his big frame and 200-foot game, the responsible pivot just needs to get stronger and heavier.

MONTREAL CANADIENS

GREAT GOALIE, BUT GOALS?

WHILE MONTREAL DIDN'T ADDRESS ITS NEED FOR SCORING PUNCH, IT STILL HAS THE WORLD'S FINEST NETMINDER

BY PAT HICKEY

THE MONTREAL CANADIENS FINISHED with the NHL's second-best record, but they fell short in the playoffs, losing to regular season nemesis Tampa Bay. They relied heavily on goaltender Carey Price and the defense as the offense struggled, particularly on the power play.

The Canadiens' only play in free agency was a low-risk deal with Alexander Semin, but they did sign trade deadline pickup Jeff Petry to a long-term deal to shore up the blueline. Fans were clamoring for GM Marc Bergevin to add a proven scorer, but beyond Semin the only other addition up from was Zack Kassian, who adds some needed size up front. Montreal hopes the 24-year-old can jumpstart his career after two disappointing seasons with the Canucks. Semin and Kassian will fight for the right wing spot vacated when the club bought out P-A Parenteau. Bottom-six forwards Torrey Mitchell and Brian Flynn were re-signed.

HISTORIC HAB
Price put up one of the best seasons ever by an NHL goalie.

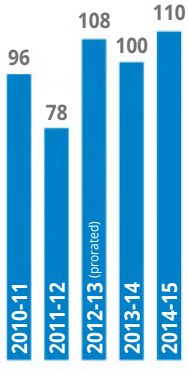
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Max Pacioretty fell short of the 40-goal mark for the second consecutive season, but he has cemented himself as one of the NHL's elite scorers. He will be missed badly if his off-season knee injury keeps him out of the lineup.

Hard work produced 24 goals for Brendan Gallagher, and P.K. Subban put up good numbers while polishing his defensive game.

But the Canadiens continue to struggle with a lack of size, especially up the middle. Alex Galchenyuk was drafted as a center, but Montreal doesn't feel he's ready for full-time duty, because he can't handle the defensive aspects of the position. Kassian will help if he stays healthy, but Bergevin said the Canadiens are committed to building through the draft and they're waiting for first-rounders Michael McCarron and Nikita Scherbak to show they're ready.

DEFENSE Last year's stingiest defense has committed almost $29 million to seven blueliners. There will be a major shift from last season, with Subban and Petry assuming the shutdown role, at least to start the year. Petry's presence might also allow Subban to join the rush more and improve on his career-high 60-point campaign.

Nathan Beaulieu will be asked to play on the No. 2 pair while being tutored by Andrei Markov. The Russian veteran will see his ice time cut, but that will allow him to stay fresh for the playoffs. The defense isn't physical, with the exception of Alexei Emelin, but the emphasis is on moving the puck quickly to help the offense.

GOALTENDING Price, the NHL's best, is coming off a spectacular season in which he won the Hart, Vezina, Jennings and Lindsay Trophies. He led the league in wins, goals-against average and save percentage, and he is entering what should be his prime.

Dustin Tokarski is in the final year of his contract as the backup, while junior star Zach Fucale is launching his pro career in St. John's of the AHL.

SPECIAL TEAMS The Canadiens have the ingredients for a strong power play with Markov and Subban at the point and Pacioretty on the wing, but a lack of movement makes it easy for defenses to key on Subban. Gallagher is willing to stand in front of the net, but Montreal may be better off with a bigger body like Kassian.

The penalty kill is strong, and it produces shorthanded scoring chances when Pacioretty is paired with Tomas Plekanec.

INTANGIBLES There's concern outside the team over the lack of a captain, but the Canadiens stress character and feel they are OK with a leadership group that features Price along with the four players who wear an 'A': Markov, Subban, Pacioretty and Plekanec.

Gallagher will be included in that group and Hall of Famer Guy Lafleur is among those who believe the undersized sparkplug will eventually wear the 'C.'

ROOKIES Bergevin said there's room for a young forward to crack the lineup and the most likely candidates are Nikita Scherbak and Michael McCarron. Scherbak has more skill, but McCarron has a better frame at 6-foot-5, 237 pounds, and he made a successful move from the wing to center as he helped the Oshawa Generals win the 2015 Memorial Cup.

X-FACTOR Success begins and ends with Price. But if the Canadiens are going to make a run in the playoffs, they must find a way to score more goals.

THE BRASS Bergevin and coach Michel Therrien have preached patience as they build this team, but the window of opportunity may close before the draft produces the help needed on offense.

The coaching staff remains the same, but there will be pressure on assistant coach Dan Lacroix if he can't breathe some life into the power play.

SCOUTING REPORT
Juulsen's offensive output increased five-fold in his soph-omore season, and his power play work is a strength thanks to his shot and puck-moving ability. Still lanky, Juulsen has a competitive fire that really at-tracted scouts.

PREDATORS

PREDATORS OR PREY?

NASHVILLE DEFIED EXPECTATIONS IN 2014-15 AND SURGED IN THE CENTRAL. CAN THEY HUSH THE LEFTOVER SKEPTICS?

BY DAVID BOCLAIR

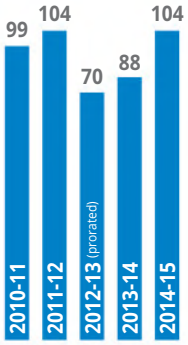
A NUMBER OF SIGNIFICANT CHANGES made a world of difference for the Nashville Predators in 2014-15, so they figured the best thing to do for 2015-16 was to keep as much of the same as possible. "My goal was that I wanted to make a couple of changes, get a little bit more depth," GM David Poile said. "But we wanted to keep the core of the team together, and that's what we've done."

Nashville re-signed a pair of 35-year-olds in Mike Ribeiro and Mike Fisher to be their top two centers, which means 11 of last season's top 12 forwards are back, as are six of the top seven defensemen and both goaltenders.

The question is whether that bunch can stage a repeat of the first 60 games, when Nashville consistently was at or near the top of the standings, or if it will continue with its late struggles, 6-12-3 in the final 21 games and an inability to hold leads in the playoffs.

USE THE FORS
Historically thin up front, the Preds love the skill of Forsberg.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE In Filip Forsberg and James Neal, Nashville finally has players up front who are consistently dangerous. Forsberg led the team with 26 goals and 63 points as a rookie and figures to get better. Neal scored 23 goals and proved he doesn't need linemates named Crosby or Malkin to be productive.

Perhaps most important, Forsberg and Neal shared the team lead with six game-winning goals each. Undoubtedly, they'll continue to be critical to Peter Laviolette's attacking approach, which followed years of Barry Trotz's defense-first style.

Craig Smith (23 goals) and Colin Wilson (20) can score but need to avoid their usual lengthy droughts.

DEFENSE Nearly every one of the Predators blueliners can – and will – carry the puck up ice, and they look for any and all opportunities to do so. Chief in this regard are Roman Josi, who played his way into the Norris Trophy discussion last season, Seth Jones, the No. 4 overall pick in 2013, and Mattias Ekholm.

ROMAN JOSI

That approach puts constant pressure on opponents, but it makes Nashville vulnerable to counterattacks, though the defense successfully negates more often than not because of its collective ability to skate and backcheck.

GOALTENDING Pekka Rinne is a three-time Vezina finalist who finished runner-up to Carey Price in 2014-15. Health issues that plagued him for two years are long gone. He's the only goalie in franchise history to win more than 40 games in a season and he's done it twice. He's under contract for another four seasons and is Nashville's MVP.

Carter Hutton returns as the No. 2, but he shouldn't expect to play any more than 15 to 20 games.

SPECIAL TEAMS Shea Weber owns the league's hardest shot and remains Nashville's biggest threat on the power play.

For all the offensive gains the Predators made in 2014-15, though, they scored just 42 power play goals. Only once in the previous 12 full seasons did they have fewer, and Weber's five were his fewest in the past six full seasons.

The hope is longtime St. Louis Blue and free agent addition Barret Jackman will help because he will lessen Weber's load on the penalty kill and keep the captain fresher for the man-advantage situations.

INTANGIBLES For most of 2014-15, the Predators showed a remarkable ability to bounce back after a goal against or a defeat. They played 43 games before they lost two in a row and played 61 before their first consecutive regulation defeats. Much more often than in any previous season, they answered an opponent's goal with one of their own on the next shift.

ROOKIES Left winger Kevin Fiala has been on the fast track since the Preds drafted him 11th overall in 2014. He was signed and brought to AHL Milwaukee midway through last season and got a taste of the NHL with one game in the regular season and another in the playoffs. As the organization's top prospect, he'll get every opportunity to make the team coming out of training camp.

X-FACTOR Steve Moses is small but has been an effective scorer in Finland and the KHL. Cody Hodgson has produced in the NHL but bottomed out in Buffalo, after which the Sabres bought out the final four years of his contract. Both were signed as free agents, and if at least one adds consistent offense, it will make the Preds that much tougher to defend.

THE BRASS Poile remains the only GM in team history. In 33 years in that role (18 with Nashville, 15 with Washington) he has led a team that made it as far as the conference finals just once. That's something he hopes to change with his current Predators core.

SCOUTING REPORT
Scouts loved how Trenin developed in just one year under coach Benoit Groulx. The Russian import went from defensive disaster to penalty killer, while maintaining a great offensive output. The big kid does need to get faster, though.

THE ROAD OUT OF HELL

LAMORIELLO IS OUT AS GM AFTER THREE DECADES, LEAVING SHERO TO RESURRECT THE FRANCHISE FROM THE INFERNO

BY RICH CHERE

AFTER 28 YEARS AS GM of the New Jersey Devils, Lou Lamoriello stepped down when the team missed the playoffs for the third straight season. Ownership gave him a nudge, and he brought in Ray Shero to revamp the roster.

Lamoriello stayed on as president, but then in classic 'Lou' style, he pulled a fast one on everyone in the hockey world and skipped town to become GM in Toronto. The Devils are now Shero's team to rebuild.

It's the end of an era for New Jersey, who won three Stanley Cups between 1995 and 2003 but nosedived when Zach Parise and Ilya Kovalchuk departed and several of Lamoriello's moves failed to pan out.

Shero acquired a pair of useful 24-year-olds, Kyle Palmieri and John Moore, in his first off-season as GM. His key acquisition was drafting future No. 1 center Pavel Zacha sixth overall. Shero also moved on from another organization fixture, director of scouting, David Conte.

CRAFTY DEVIL
It took years of persistence for Schneider to earn a No. 1 gig.

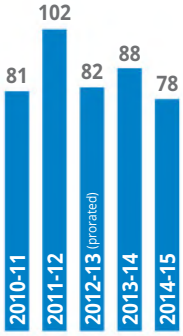
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE The Jaromir Jagr "era" is also over and fingers are crossed that Patrik Elias, who turns 40 in April, can recapture his scoring touch. Mike Cammalleri stands as the team's biggest threat if he can stay healthy, but after struggling to score in 2014-15, the Devils are looking for Adam Henrique to carry the load along with new addition Palmieri. Clearly, that won't be enough firepower. Playmaker Scott Gomez is also gone.

Defensemen Andy Greene, Adam Larsson and Eric Gelinas will be asked to contribute to the offense, which could be worse barring some production from Travis Zajac and proof from young Reid Boucher or AHL sniper Paul Thompson that they can score in the NHL.

DEFENSE No matter who was behind the bench the past 25 years, the Devils never strayed far from the trap and defense-first approach. John Hynes and Shero suggest they want to become a "fast, attacking" squad, but team defense is still their M.O. In 2011-12, when they went to the Cup final, their goal differential was plus-19. Last season it was minus-35 and is a combined minus-63 since 2012.

Moore joins a maturing but very young defense that may employ the lone veteran Greene with either Larsson, 23, or Damon Severson, 22, as a shutdown pair. Gelinas, 24, and Jon Merrill, 23, need to take two steps forward after a step back in their development last season.

GOALTENDING Had he not played behind a goal-starved team with a young defense, Cory Schneider would have challenged for the Vezina Trophy. Pete DeBoer, his job on the line when the season began, started Schneider in the first 20 games and that proved unwise as the team went 9-9-2. Used more prudently when Keith Kinkaid became a reliable backup, Schneider (fifth in save percentage) established himself as a worthy successor to Martin Brodeur.

SPECIAL TEAMS Virtually everyone credited assistant coach Adam Oates with assembling a power play that ranked top 10, but Shero didn't retain him. It will fall upon Hynes and Geoff Ward to put together a competitive man-advantage group built around Cammalleri.

How does a team go from leading the league in penalty killing in 2013-14 to finishing in the bottom third? That's one area the Devils must improve upon. It'll be the biggest challenge for new assistant coach Alain Nasreddine. A healthy Severson will help.

INTANGIBLES Injuries sidelined Bryce Salvador for much of the past two seasons and the Devils clearly lacked his leadership. With Salvador not returning, the club will have a new captain, so guidance will be an important factor in keeping a rebuilding team on track. Greene, Henrique, Zajac and Elias are the leaders on the team with tenure.

ROOKIES Zacha will be given every chance to make the roster as an 18-year-old on a team that needs help up front. So will center Blake Coleman, 23, who signed an entry-level contract after four years of college hockey, but he may need seasoning.

X-FACTOR The greatest challenge will be generating goals. The offense must be better and one player who will be key is Thompson, who had 33 goals in AHL with 22 assists. If he can score half that many in the NHL, it will be a big boost for the team.

THE BRASS Not surprisingly, Shero turned to the Penguins' organization during his coaching search and hired Hynes, who had coached Wilkes-Barre/Scranton the past five seasons. Surprisingly, Shero didn't retain Scott Stevens as an assistant coach. Instead, he brought in Nasreddine from Wilkes-Barre as well as former Bruins assistant Geoff Ward back from Europe.

BROOKLYN BARRAGE

THE YOUNG ISLES CROSSED THE BRIDGE INTO CONTENDER TERRITORY IN 2014-15. HOW MUCH BETTER CAN THESE KIDS GET?

BY STU HACKEL

FOR THE FIRST TIME SINCE 1983-84, the end of the franchise's glory years, the New York Islanders broke the 100-point mark. They also flirted with first place in the Metropolitan Division on the strength of a rapidly improving young group of forwards led by Hart Trophy finalist John Tavares, augmented by steadier goaltending and a defense bolstered by the acquisitions of Nick Leddy and Johnny Boychuk. The club's 101 points represented a 22-point improvement. The question now is, does this portend a continued upward trend or will they fall back this season?

Management tinkered very little this summer, believing it has assets within the organization who can address needs. While some remain skeptical, claiming unaddressed weaknesses evident in their bitter first-round playoff exit linger (notably special teams play), there is confidence internally that the Islanders can grow into a legitimate Cup contender.

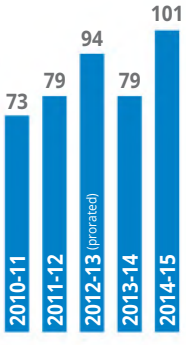
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE The Islanders had the fourth-best offense in 2014-15, and they have the potential to be even better this year. It starts with Tavares, who lost the scoring title on the season's final day. Trade winds blew around Tavares' usual right winger, Kyle Okposo, after he missed 22 games with an eye injury and seemed less impactful when he returned. Anders Lee briefly flourished aside Tavares during Okposo's injury, but he was later scratched for key playoff games.

A revolving door twirled on the top line's left side, including Josh Bailey, Mikhail Grabovski, Nikolay Kulemin, Brock Nelson and Ryan Strome (who notched 50 points in his first full season). None lack talent, but an uptick in consistency will propel the club to elite status.

The Islanders' most reliable trio could be the fourth line, arguably the NHL's best. Casey Cizikas, Cal Clutterbuck and Matt Martin bring intensity every night, allowing the club to play an effective four-line game and wear out opponents.

DEFENSE The blueline leaped to respectability with Cup winners Leddy and Boychuk. Along with Travis Hamonic, they form the core on defense. Thomas Hickey and Calvin de Haan can function as effective puck-movers, while Brian Strait plays a simple defensive game. Their collective growth and the development of their top AHLers allowed GM Garth Snow to deal 2012 first-rounder Griffin Reinhart at the draft.

The Islanders hound the puck with relish, excel at getting first-man pressure on the puck carrier and go for big hits. Frans Nielsen, who also contributes offensively, usually draws top opposition centers. Kulemin and Bailey are also strong two-way competitors.

GOALTENDING Jaroslav Halak played in a career-high 59 games, but as he's done throughout his career, he tends to wear down if not rested. Halak hasn't won a playoff series since starring for Montreal in 2010. Snow picked up reliable backup Thomas Greiss in free agency.

SPECIAL TEAMS Despite all of their offensive weapons, the Islanders were hampered by special teams. The middle-of-the-pack power play stunk in the playoffs, blanked for seven games by Washington.

The penalty kill ranked near the bottom, displaying a lack of structure. That changed against Washington, as the Islanders devised a scheme to stop them by keying on Alex Ovechkin. The Caps only scored twice on the power play.

INTANGIBLES The players have bought in to what Jack Capuano and his coaching staff are selling. Tavares provides Jonathan Toews-style leadership-by-example. His message to his teammates has to include that although they should be embarrassed by their anemic Game 7 against the Caps (only 11 shots), they're a good team and can be better.

ROOKIES With Reinhart gone, Scott Mayfield and Ryan Pulock become the top blueline prospects. Mayfield, who took Lubomir Visnovsky's spot in Round 1, is a shutdown guy. Pulock can rifle the puck, though his skating is uncertain. Both still need seasoning.

X-FACTOR Four young forwards – Nelson, Bailey, Strome, Lee – must continue to progress offensively and take some of the load off Tavares. Each was plagued by inconsistency.

A modest decrease in goals against would better the team's chances of winning the Metro.

THE BRASS Snow deserves a lot of credit. Observers doubted his plan, but his vision of an exciting, hard-edged team is starting to be realized. And the new arrangement with Brooklyn's Barclays Center means Charles Wang and his ownership partners won't be bleeding red ink in the foreseeable future.

SCOUTING REPORT
Devoid of hype for most of the season thanks to a knee injury, Barzal got back in the conversation with a great outing for Canada at the world under-18s. Strong on his skates and blessed with vision, Barzal is an excellent playmaker.

NEW YORK RANGERS

MANHATTAN PROJECT

WITH A NEW GM, THE RANGERS RELOAD AFTER TWO LONG POST-SEASON RUNS. CAN THEY GO DEEP YET AGAIN?

BY STEVE ZIPAY

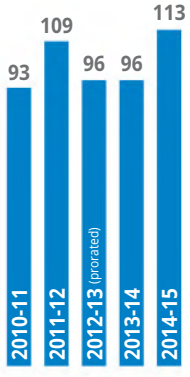
THE ADAGE IS TRUE: carrying the Presidents' Trophy into the playoffs doesn't guarantee more silver. Despite a franchise-record 113 points in which Henrik Lundqvist was injured for 25 games, the New York Rangers came up empty against the Lightning in the Eastern Conference final, ignominiously blanked at home in Games 5 and 7 to derail a second straight trip to the Stanley Cup final.

The core is back for coach Alain Vigneault's third season. Under cap pressure, and needing to sign RFA center Derek Stepan, the front office could only patch some of the holes. Losing Martin St-Louis to retirement will hurt. He slowed late in the season, but he had 52 points and provided leadership.

Several Metropolitan Division opponents improved on paper, so the sense is that it will be an uphill battle for the Rangers, not only to make the playoffs, but to go deep for the third consecutive year.

BLUE STEAL
Lundqvist remains the pivotal man in New York's plan.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE The speedy Rangers won't change gears. They'll remain up-tempo, but they lost some velocity when Carl Hagelin was shipped to Anaheim for Emerson Etem and a second-round pick. The Blueshirts hope Etem or left winger Viktor Stalberg, who was bought out by Nashville, can fill Hagelin's third-line role.

St-Louis, 40, ran out of gas in the second half and scored just once in the playoffs. His passion and work ethic will be missed, but the Rangers have numerous leaders. Mats Zuccarello, Derick Brassard and Rick Nash (can he score 40 again?) will comprise the first line, while Stepan, Chris Kreider and possibly J.T. Miller make up the second.

How the top nine forwards will shake out also depends on whether Vigneault deploys sophomore Kevin Hayes at center or wing, and if center Oscar Lindberg, the best player in AHL Hartford last season, makes the jump.

deadline, the top six became the best in the East and having him for the entire season should be a plus.

McDonagh didn't provide the offense expected, but he, Dan Girardi and Marc Staal were a tremendous shutdown trio. Kevin Klein was valuable when McDonagh and Dan Boyle were injured. Klein had a career year offensively before his game dipped following a broken arm. Boyle was the weakest link defensively and struggled as the power play quarterback, though he rebounded in the playoffs. Depth D-man Matt Hunwick left for a two-year deal with Toronto. Raphael Diaz signed as a free agent and is the frontrunner to start as the spare, though Brady Skjei is knocking on the door.

PLAYOFF RECORD

GOALTENDING Cam Talbot rescued the season, going 16-4-3 after Lundqvist was hurt in January. Talbot's rising stock led to the Rangers shipping him to Edmonton to be its No. 1.

Lundqvist, 33, is unquestionably the backbone of the team, and is expected to play 60 to 65 games. Antti Raanta, the former Blackhawk, was signed as a free agent and is pencilled in to play about 20 games.

SPECIAL TEAMS The power play's biggest fault is it tends to over-pass. The unit showed signs of life in the playoffs when Yandle and Boyle stepped up.

The penalty kill, which starred in the regular season, slipped in the playoffs and now loses Hagelin. But Jesper Fast has earned a spot in the rotation and Stalberg will help.

INTANGIBLES Is Hayes the answer at center or is his real value as a big winger? How will new GM Jeff Gorton, at the helm after Glen Sather narrowed his role to president, maneuver at the trade deadline?

For the first time in the 82-game schedule era, the Rangers won't have a road trip or homestand longer than three games. They'll play 17 back-to-backs, second most in the NHL.

ROOKIES Lindberg could be the third-line center out of training camp. Skjei, who left the University of Minnesota and played in the AHL late in the season and playoffs, should see some more time in Hartford unless he's needed sooner.

X-FACTOR Can the Blueshirts get more out of Kreider, the Boston College product who has 30-goal and 65-point potential? He's 6-foot-3 with blazing speed, but he has been wildly inconsistent. They need him to turn the corner and become an elite power forward.

THE BRASS After 15 years as both president and GM in New York, Sather, 71, decided fresh blood was necessary. He handed the GM job to Gorton, the savvy assistant GM, who will have the final say on player personnel. He will still lean on Sather and the rest of the management team for advice.

SCOUTING REPORT
There is lots of potential within Gropp, a 6-foot-3 speedster who can really wire the puck. The question is if he can develop the proper disposition for the pro game. If Gropp increases his battle level, he'll be a tough load to handle.

STAYING THE COURSE

OTTAWA DEMONSTRATED DOWN THE STRETCH HOW DYNAMIC IT CAN BE, SO THE SUITS STUCK TO THE STATUS QUO

BY BRUCE GARRIOCH

THE OTTAWA SENATORS HAD a miracle finish to make the playoffs last season and they don't want to have to complete that feat again. Led by the remarkable story of Andrew 'The Hamburglar' Hammond, the Senators went 23-4-4 down the stretch to snag the No. 7 seed on the final day before getting knocked out by the Montreal Canadiens in the first round.

In January, when Ottawa's playoff chances looked bleak, some felt the franchise should tank for a chance at Connor McDavid. The stretch drive gave everybody hope that a full season under coach Dave Cameron might be the right ingredient to help get the Senators to the next level. GM Bryan Murray, along with assistants Pierre Dorion and Randy Lee, spent the off-season making sure the team was kept together.

Murray barely touched the roster, meaning it's up to the current group to find consistency and build off last season's run.

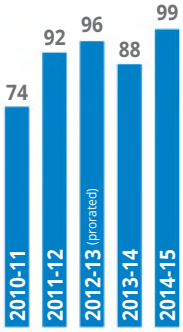
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE It took a while, but the Senators had no problem scoring, and they spread the offense around. They had five players with 20-plus goals – Kyle Turris, Mike Hoffman, Mark Stone, Erik Karlsson and Mika Zibanejad – while Bobby Ryan had 18. Naturally, Karlsson is the straw that stirs the drink. He's the prime puck-mover for the forwards.

The biggest change Cameron made was increasing the team's tempo when he took over. Under former coach Paul MacLean, an emphasis was put on defense, which stifled the offensive output.

DEFENSE It's no accident Karlsson just won his second Norris Trophy. He plays nearly 30 minutes a night, he's effective and he makes things happen. He's also developed a solid chemistry with Marc Methot. When Karlsson is on his game, he's one of the best defenseman in the league.

Patrick Wiercioch emerged down the stretch and has solidified a spot in the club's top four while Cody Ceci has been steady along with Mark Borowiecki. The decision to send Eric Gryba packing means Jared Cowen needs to stop all the talk about wanting more of a role and seize the opportunity he's going to get.

The Senators just need steady play from the blueline, which is what they got in the second half of last season.

GOALTENDING There will be no crowded crease in Ottawa. After signing Hammond to a three-year extension, the Senators sent backup Robin Lehner and center David Legwand to the Sabres in exchange for the No. 21 pick in the 2015 draft. Craig Anderson reclaims the No. 1 gig after getting hurt down the stretch, and Hammond will likely play around 20 games. The Senators dealt Lehner because they feel Anderson, 34, has a better chance to help them win right away.

The battery of Anderson and Hammond allows college UFA signing Matt O'Connor to get acquainted with the pro game in the AHL. The organization sees the 23-year-old as the long-term solution in goal.

SPECIAL TEAMS The Senators made the playoffs with a below-average power play. Former Avalanche assistant Andre Tourigny will be tasked with improving it. With Karlsson leading the way, the power play will always have top-10 potential.

The penalty kill was respectable, but there's still room for improvement. If both units can get better, making the playoffs won't be as difficult.

INTANGIBLES Ottawa's incredible stretch run has heightened expectations. The Senators are supposed to make the playoffs and they are supposed to be better than they were last season. Cameron will have a full training camp and the belief is the players who finished strong are going to pick up where they left off.

ROOKIES Defenseman Chris Wideman was the AHL's best blueliner, and the Sens believe he's close to making the jump. Shane Prince, a 22-year-old left winger, led Binghamton with 65 points and could also make the team out of training camp.

X-FACTOR Anderson is expected to lead this club to the playoffs. There was no way the Senators were going to let Hammond walk away after his incredible finish, but if he's thrust into the starter's role, can he carry the load again?

THE BRASS Murray, who is battling Stage 4 colon cancer while remaining on the job, heads into the final year of his contract and it'll be great news if the club is able to have success under his tutelage.

Cameron was signed to a two-year extension, so if the players continue to respond to what he's selling, the Senators could make waves in the Atlantic.

SCOUTING REPORT
Chabot lives off his brain and his feet. An effortless skater who got better as the season went on, Chabot is a great decision-maker and handles the puck with ease. He really jumped up when teammate Jakub Zboril was injured.

THE OLD COLLEGE TRY

WITH A ROOKIE COACH AT THE HELM AND FEW NOTABLE CHANGES UP FRONT, CAN THE FLYERS CLAW BACK TO CONTENTION?

BY WAYNE FISH

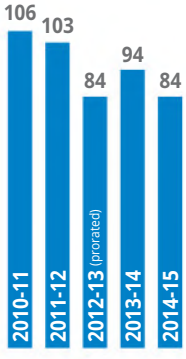
IT HASN'T QUITE BEEN an "everything must go" sale, but the Philadelphia Flyers have taken on a decidedly new look. They've changed coaches, made a wholesale restructure of their defense and adjusted their attitude about long-range planning.

GM Ron Hextall wanted a new voice behind the bench and surprised the hockey world by tabbing the University of North Dakota's Dave Hakstol to replace Craig Berube. Hextall also increased his stockpile of draft picks to seven of the first 99 selections in the 2015 draft, in part, by shipping veteran blueliners Kimmo Timonen and Braydon Coburn to contenders. That, along with moving Nicklas Grossmann, has signalled a switch from the Flyers' typical win-now approach.

Hextall's current challenge is maneuvering within a bloated salary cap structure. Burdensome contracts (Vincent Lecavalier's, among others) are making it difficult for the Flyers to add talent.

'CEK MATE
Voracek broke out as an Art Ross threat in 2014-15.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Jakub Voracek made a serious run at becoming the first Flyer to win a scoring title, while Mark Streit provided playmaking and points on defense.

The only notable offensive acquisition of the off-season is Sam Gagner, a reclamation project who disappointed in Arizona.

Philadelphia relies too much on its top-five power play and must generate more at even strength. More production is needed from young stalwarts Brayden Schenn and Sean Couturier, plus veterans R.J. Umberger and Lecavalier.

DEFENSE Gone are Coburn, Grossmann and Timonen, opening the door for prospects Travis Sanheim, Samuel Morin, Shayne Gostisbehere and maybe even 2015 first-rounder Ivan Provorov.

The youth movement, along with the return of Michael Del Zotto, should help pick up the speed factor on the back line, something that's been missing in recent years.

And there's the addition of wild card Evgeni Medvedev, a 33-year-old Russian who scouts say could provide some offense, despite never playing in North America.

With the defense in flux, the Flyers will rely even more on the shutdown line of Couturier, Read and either Umberger or Wayne Simmonds. The closest thing the Flyers have to a shutdown defense pair is Streit and Nick Schultz, if they're put together.

GOALTENDING Steve Mason's goals-against average and save percentage were both among the NHL's top 10. The only question is whether he can stay healthy for an entire season.

The Flyers signed free agent Michal Neuvirth to replace Ray Emery. Neuvirth has plenty of NHL experience, has won a pair of Calder Cups and should be an upgrade over Emery. Hextall indicated the plan is to trust Neuvirth with more starts than the typical backup's role in recent years.

The Flyers have brought in former Los Angeles goaltending development instructor Kim Dillabaugh to replace Jeff Reese.

SPECIAL TEAMS Last season, the power play powered the Flyers, while their penalty kill just about killed them.

Simmonds and Claude Giroux tied for third in power play goals (14) and will remain together. Couturier and Read are key figures on the PK.

The Flyers retained their assistant coaches, so Joe Mullen should have the power play in good standing again. Ian Laperriere needs to get more from his penalty killers. The PK has almost no place to go but up.

INTANGIBLES Coaching will be the center of attention. Hextall said he changed coaches, in part, to get more out of his young players. That's likely to be Hakstol's forte, since he's spent the past decade working with college players.

ROOKIES If a freshman makes the roster, it's likely to be a defenseman. Sanheim, Morin, Gostisbehere and Provorov will compete for the gig. Of the four, Provorov has the highest ceiling.

Up front, Nick Cousins has an outside chance.

X-FACTOR To get in the playoff hunt, the Flyers will have to quickly adapt to Hakstol's system and execute it well before the season gets too far along.

A healthy year for Mason and bounce-back years for Lecavalier, Umberger and Andrew MacDonald would help. As would another career year from Voracek.

THE BRASS Team chairman Ed Snider signalled he's all in with Hextall when he allowed the second-year GM to hire the unproven Hakstol. Snider, not known for his patience, seems on board with Hextall's long-range, build-from-within approach.

So far, this attitude has been embraced by the rabid but demanding fan base.

SCOUTING REPORT
In some corners, Provorov was the best blueliner available in the draft. Even though he went second to Noah Hanifin in the end, the Russian has a great hockey mind and a nasty edge that scouts loved. Puts up points, too.

PITTSBURGH PENGUINS

EVGENI MALKIN

THE TIME TO WIN IS NOW

AFTER A STRING OF DISAPPOINTMENTS, PENS ENTER CUP-OR-BUST MODE. IS KESSEL THE MAN TO PUT THEM OVER THE TOP?

BY SHELLY ANDERSON

THERE WAS A TOXIC MIX of mounting outrage and apathy among the Pittsburgh Penguins faithful after yet another early playoff exit. But that quickly morphed to intrigue and appreciation when GM Jim Rutherford not only snagged Phil Kessel from Toronto, but did so without giving up either of Pittsburgh's top two youngsters on defense, Olli Maatta and Derrick Pouliot. Kessel, a five-time 30-goal scorer still in his prime, adds speed and potency to the group. And he's not injury-prone, having played in every game for the past five seasons. And adding Nick Bonino further improves the offense.

The Penguins have failed to reach the Stanley Cup final since their championship in 2009 and will be relying on a youthful defense. But there is reason for optimism the club finally has the parts to complement stars Sidney Crosby, Evgeni Malkin, Kris Letang and Marc-Andre Fleury well enough to once again play into June.

PEN-ULTIMATE
Crosby and the current core are hungry for another Cup.

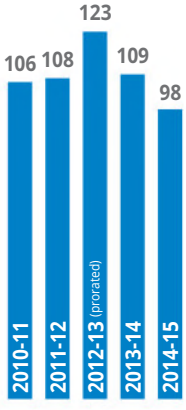
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Where Kessel will line up remains to be determined, or at least revealed, and concerns about his work ethic and attitude will follow him from Toronto. Still, he gives Pittsburgh a shot at assembling the type of firepower up front the club has wanted for years. The Penguins were a meager 19th in scoring in 2014-15.

Patric Hornqvist will be a fixture in the top six. Other candidates for the top two lines include David Perron, Chris Kunitz, Pascal Dupuis, Beau Bennett and KHL import Sergei Plotnikov.

The battles and trickle-down effect will fit Rutherford's vision of having four lines that can score. A third line of Nick Bonino centering Kunitz and Dupuis – the latter being two longtime linemates of Crosby's – would help bring stability to that line.

The competition could forge an interesting landing spot for Bennett, a first-round pick who has been plagued by injury and inconsistency. He might not be as miscast as it would seem given Rutherford's desire for production from his fourth line.

DEFENSE Letang was a Norris Trophy candidate before a concussion wiped out the end of his season. Now healthy, he is ready to be the undisputed anchor on defense after veterans Paul Martin and Christian Ehrhoff moved on in free agency. That's important as the Penguins will use the regular season to solidify a defensive group that got a whole lot younger. Letang will be paired with Maatta, 21. Maatta's steady play defies his age, but his 2014-15 season was gutted by thyroid cancer and shoulder surgery.

The second pairing likely will be Pouliot, 21, who has 34 games of NHL experience, and Ian Cole, a pick-up at the trade deadline who fit in well. Vying for spots on the third pairing are veterans Rob Scuderi and Ben Lovejoy, along with youngsters Adam Clendening, Brian Dumoulin and Tim Erixon.

GOALTENDING Fleury is coming off of his most consistent and probably best season, in which he led the NHL with 10 shutouts and was the team MVP. He has topped 30 wins each of the past six non-lockout seasons. His backup looks to be Jeff Zatkoff, who filled that role in 2013-14.

SPECIAL TEAMS Whether it's the addition of Kessel or a light bulb over how to deploy Crosby and Malkin (who both prefer the right half-wall), Pittsburgh will need to improve the power play, which slipped from leading the league in 2013-14 to 10th last season.

The Penguins have been one of the best penalty killing teams in recent years. Expect a boost from the return of Dupuis, who missed most of last season because of blood clots.

INTANGIBLES There's a growing sense that the window of opportunity, once wide open, could be closing with Crosby turning 28 and Malkin 29 this off-season. Will that create a positive sense of urgency or insurmountable pressure?

ROOKIES Oskar Sundqvist, a 2012 third-round pick, will contend for the fourth-line center job, though he'd benefit from some time in the AHL after playing solely in his native Sweden to this point.

X-FACTOR Kessel is being given a fresh start and a chance to play with a world-class center. How he responds will have a big impact.

THE BRASS Majority co-owners Mario Lemieux and Ron Burkle are exploring the sale of the club, apparently with the intention of keeping a minor stake. There's no chance of the team moving, so the possible sale wouldn't be nearly as significant if Lemieux wasn't such a cornerstone of the franchise for more than 30 years.

SCOUTING REPORT
In terms of flat-out skill, some scouts put Sprong right behind McDavid and Eichel. However, the second-rounder has to round out other parts of his game and get more involved overall. Fun fact: he's originally from Amsterdam.

ST. LOUIS BLUES

STILL STUCK IN REPEAT MODE

ALMOST AN IDENTICAL CREW RETURNS TO THE STAGE FOR THE BLUES THIS SEASON. IS IT THE SAME OLD SONG IN ST. LOUIS?

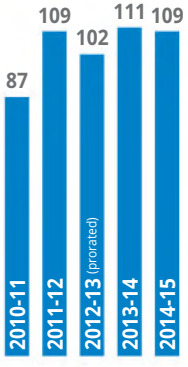
BY JEREMY RUTHERFORD

THE ST. LOUIS BLUES HAVE BEEN a top regular season team the past four years with a record of 181-86-27. But they are the poster team for demonstrating that regular season success means little in the playoffs, going 10-17 and winning just one of five post-season series.

After St. Louis fell to Minnesota in six games, significant changes were expected, but only tweaks were made. The Blues kicked tires on Mike Babcock but ultimately retained Ken Hitchcock as coach. They did pull the trigger on a trade, sending T.J. Oshie to the Capitals for Troy Brouwer, and decided against re-signing defenseman Barret Jackman. But other than that, inking Kyle Brodziak is the only notable addition to a roster that has underachieved. Re-signing Vladimir Tarasenko to an eight-year, $60-million extension was lauded by fans, but many wonder if the Blues can get over the hump with an all-too-familiar cast.

GO-TO GUY
The Blues finally have a legit superstar in Tarasenko.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE The disappearance of the Blues' offense in the playoffs sealed their fate. Aside from a six-goal outburst in Game 4 of their series against the Wild, the Blues averaged just 1.6 goals. Alexander Steen, Jaden Schwartz, David Backes and Oshie were four of the team's top-five goal scorers in the regular season. They combined for four goals in the playoffs.

There will be a continued reliance on Tarasenko, who led the Blues with 37 goals and had six of the team's 18 goals in the playoffs.

DEFENSE St. Louis prides itself on a dependable defense that is quick in transition, but that wasn't the case in 2014-15.

Kevin Shattenkirk went to his first All-Star Game and Alex Pietrangelo had his moments when Shattenkirk was shelved for 25 games with an abdominal injury, but the unit as a whole wasn't nearly effective enough.

Jay Bouwmeester's production nosedived to 13 points, down from 37. The Blues want to do a better job of closing gaps and be more active on the rush. They believe the promotion of Petteri Lindbohm and Robert Bortuzzo to the third pair in place of Jackman will help in that department. Having Carl Gunnarsson for a full season will help solidify the defense.

GOALTENDING Brian Elliott and Jake Allen had 26 and 22 victories, respectively, making the Blues one of three clubs with two 20-win goalies. Both will return, but after Allen took over in the playoffs, he is expected to see more starts.

The 25-year-old is as capable as any young goalie in the league but is still unproven in the playoffs. And with the club again showing a lack of trust in Elliott, the position is deep but still has its doubters.

SPECIAL TEAMS St. Louis was one of two teams (along with the Vancouver Canucks) that ranked in top-10 in both power play and penalty kill. Assistant coach Kirk Muller took over what had been a good power play and made it better. Credit also goes to Shattenkirk, who had 25 of his 56 points on the man advantage.

The penalty kill, under associate coach Brad Shaw, wasn't as proficient as it has been in the past but still finished strong.

The departure of Oshie hurts, but Brouwer can contribute on both units.

INTANGIBLES The noticeable lack of intensity in their playoff loss to the Wild exacerbated concerns about the Blues' leadership and character. The team's willpower in the postseason doesn't seem as dogged and determined as other Western contenders.

David Backes returns as captain, but he's in the final year of his contract. St. Louis isn't hiding from the fact that they're building around a younger core, featuring Tarasenko and Pietrangelo. It'll be interesting to see how much of the leadership role they grab.

ROOKIES Petteri Lindbohm, a sixth-rounder in 2012, caught everyone's eye in 23 games. He's been pencilled into the starting lineup, and if that doesn't saddle him with high enough expectations, he'll be replacing longtime Blue Jackman.

X-FACTOR The question entering 2015-16 is how the players will respond to Hitchcock after the Blues' courtship of Babcock. Hitchcock was brought back on a lame-duck, one-year deal, and if he can't re-command the respect of the dressing room, that relationship could unravel in a hurry.

THE BRASS Since buying the Blues in 2012, owner Tom Stillman has spent more money than many anticipated, and he's shown extreme patience. He has the utmost faith in GM Doug Armstrong, who signed a five-year contract in 2013. At some point, though, Stillman will need to see results.

SCOUTING REPORT
Smart, poised with the puck and really fast, Dunn is that offensive defenseman who makes teams go these days. Though he got posterized by Connor McDavid, Dunn was a terrific producer for the IceDogs and really competes.

SAN JOSE SHARKS

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

WITH THE WINDOW OF CONTENTION CLOSING RAPIDLY, GM WILSON MAKES AGGRESSIVE OFF-SEASON ADDITIONS

BY DAVID POLLAK

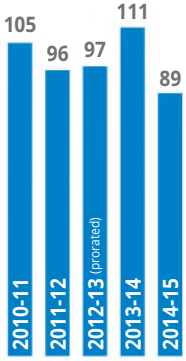
THE SAN JOSE SHARKS LIVED DOWN to their own diminished expectations last season, missing the playoffs for the first time since 2003 after listening to GM Doug Wilson talk about the need for a rebuild and leadership change. Maybe that's why the tone was so different this summer. "The transition is over," Wilson said. "That was last year."

This year? Well, Wilson was speaking hours after signing Paul Martin in free agency and two days before adding the versatile Joel Ward to the roster – two strong indicators San Jose has returned to its customary win-now frame of mind.

Questions remain, of course. Have the Sharks done enough to return to the playoffs after a 12th-place finish in the increasingly tough West? Is that public rift between Wilson and former captain Joe Thornton really behind them? And what impact will new coach Peter DeBoer have?

REGULAR JOES
Pavelski and Thornton are San Jose's go-to offensive duo.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE The post-mortem for last season focused on defensive-zone problems, but goal production also dropped from 239 to 224. Patrick Marleau notched only 19 after hitting 30 the previous season. Thornton and Joe Pavelski both declined in points-per-game. Among the big guns, only Logan Couture matched that stat from 2013-14.

Part of the problem was finding players to round out the top two lines. Ward will definitely help, and more is expected of Tomas Hertl, who managed only 13 goals in 82 games after scoring 15 in 37 during his injury-shortened rookie season.

Expect another strong offensive showing from Brent Burns, but the Sharks should be concerned that his 17 goals accounted for 40 percent of the contributions from the blueline.

DEFENSE Martin has spent the past decade in the East, so he'll need to adjust to everything from the extra travel to the rugged style of play in the West. But the Sharks are counting on him big-time, and DeBoer sees the veteran as a natural partner for the freewheeling Burns.

Stalwart Marc-Edouard Vlasic remains San Jose's most reliable defenseman, and the hope is Justin Braun will improve on a subpar season to justify the minutes he's likely to earn alongside the Olympian. The third pair likely will match Brenden Dillon with Mirco Mueller, the Sharks' 2013 first-round pick who struggled after making the leap to San Jose from Everett of the WHL.

GOALTENDING Last season the Sharks yielded 33 more goals. Although they weren't all on Antti Niemi, everyone knew he was on the way out.

Martin Jones cost the Sharks a 2016 first-round pick and a prospect, but his numbers (16-11-2, 1.99 goals-against average, .923 save percentage) as Jonathan Quick's backup in Los Angeles for two seasons show more promise than those of Alex Stalock's (8-9-2, 2.62 GAA, .902 SP) behind Niemi over that same period.

SPECIAL TEAMS Like a lot of teams, the Sharks often have trouble keeping both units clicking at the same time.

DeBoer sees Martin as part of the fix on the PK. "This guy's been a staple on everybody's penalty kill since he entered the league with New Jersey a decade ago," the coach said.

INTANGIBLES Leadership was a sticking point last season after Thornton lost the captaincy, then became one of four players with an 'A' on their jerseys as no one wore a 'C.'

DeBoer has already declared the team will have a captain. If it's anyone other than Pavelski, consider it a surprise.

ROOKIES Right winger Nikolay Goldobin, 20, could be a candidate to fill one of those slots on the top two lines. Drafted in the first round in 2014 for his offensive skill, Goldobin spent last season in Finland (11 goals and 21 points in 38 games) trying to become a more well-rounded player.

X-FACTOR Not everybody was on the same page last season, reflected in the fact that former coach Todd McLellan left by mutual agreement.

Expect DeBoer and Wilson to see more eye-to-eye on how to get things done, but the key is getting players totally on board after a season in which Couture acknowledged the culture was "not great."

THE BRASS Majority owner Hasso Plattner wasn't happy with all the turmoil but so far trusts Wilson to repair things, giving the GM a vote of confidence and the green light to spend up to the salary cap.

Still, it's hard to imagine that support will stay if San Jose flounders again and attendance continues to drop.

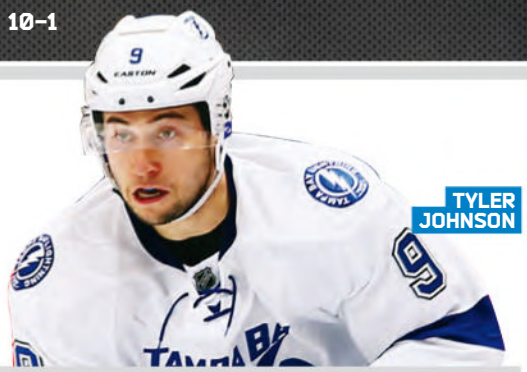
TAMPA BAY

LIGHTNING



TYLER JOHNSON

DEAD SET ON DEJA-VU

THERE'S NO REASON TO BELIEVE TAMPA'S YOUNG CORE AND KINETIC OFFENSE WON'T KEEP IT IN THE CUP HUNT

BY ERIK ERLENDSSON

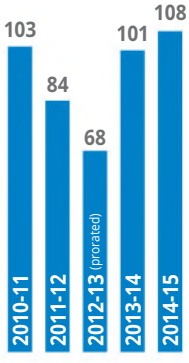
AFTER REACHING THE STANLEY CUP FINAL for the second time in franchise history, and coming within two victories of a second title, the Tampa Bay Lightning head into 2015-16 with a simple approach: if nothing is broken, there is nothing to fix. The roster that led them to the final remains virtually the same.

With one of the youngest teams in the league, it's easy to understand why GM Steve Yzerman wouldn't want to make too many changes to the roster. The Bolts will enter the season with only two players older than 30 – center Valtteri Filppula and defenseman Matt Carle, both of whom will be 31 – while 11 players will be 25 or younger, including captain Steven Stamkos and top defenseman Victor Hedman.

The only subtractions are 35-year-old Brenden Morrow and depth defenseman Mark Barberio, while former Senator Erik Condra is the lone noteworthy free agent addition.

BOLT IT DOWN
Stamkos leads the NHL's most electric and lethal attack.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Two-time Rocket Richard Trophy winner Stamkos leads the top scoring team in the league. But a big reason for Tampa Bay's success comes from the depth of the forward group, specifically the line of Tyler Johnson, Ondrej Palat and Nikita Kucherov. That trio, the league's highest scoring last season, accounted for a combined 199 points.

Tampa Bay finished with four 20-goal scorers, five 50-point producers and 11 different players with double-digits in goals.

With that type of production up and down the lineup, the Lightning were a difficult team to match up against. With only Condra new to the group, and 2013 third-overall pick Jonathan Drouin expected to have a bigger impact offensively, the Lightning figure to be just as, if not more, dangerous.

DEFENSE The D-corps is formidable, as Hedman blossomed into a true No. 1 while becoming a Conn Smythe candidate. The addition of Anton Stralman solidified the top pairing. Jason Garrison and late-season addition Braydon Coburn make a reliable second pair.

There are some question marks beyond that, starting with veteran Carle, the team's highest-paid defenseman, who had his share of adventures in the playoffs paired with 6-foot-7 Andrej Sustr.

The emergence of Nikita Nesterov made Barberio, the 2012 AHL defenseman of the year, expendable. He wasn't given a qualifying offer. Nesterov and Luke Witkowski figure to round out the group, while 2012 first-round pick Slater Koekkoek will push for roster spot after debuting last season.

GOALTENDING The depth in net has never been better in franchise history, and if there were any doubts about Ben Bishop as a true No. 1, they were answered. Andrei Vasilevskiy, a 2012 first-round pick, will eventually assume the top role, but enters as backup.

Kristers Gudlevskis and Adam Wilcox provide depth as the expected duo to lead the farm team for AHL Syracuse.

SPECIAL TEAMS The penalty kill played well after associate coach Rick Bowness made some early adjustments. With the same personnel, the unit will again be a strength.

The power play, however, was a mystery, as the highest scoring team in the league had middle-of-the-pack success despite the presence of Stamkos and other weapons. Coach Jon Cooper needs to change the approach if they want to make teams pay for taking penalties.

INTANGIBLES In a league that still covets size as teams try to build heavy rosters, the Lightning are the antithesis, built on speed and skill. Tampa Bay is able to play the game fast and has a roster full of players with strong hockey sense.

ROOKIES After seeing forwards Johnson, Palat and Alex Killorn make their way up the ranks, some of the top defensive prospects are starting to knock on the door. Koekkoek and fellow first-rounder Anthony DeAngelo (2014) are entering their second pro years. Witkowski is expected to stick with the big club, while Tampa remains high on rearguards Dylan Blujus and Jake Dotchin.

X-FACTOR Stamkos enters the last year of his contract and will become a UFA in July if the team can't get his name on an extension. The longer the negotiations play out, the more of a distraction it will become for a team with sights on the Cup.

THE BRASS Cooper has won a championship at every level he's coached except the NHL. Being so close is only going to fuel the fire throughout the organization to finish the job. "The pilot light's been lit to get back here," Cooper said. "I'll be looking forward to September."

FUTURE WATCH ›ZONE

TOP 10 PROSPECTS

1. Anthony DeAngelo, D, 19, S.S. Marie (OHL)
Offense-minded defenseman has matured
ACQUIRED '14 draft, 19th overall NHL '17-18

2. Mitchell Stephens, C, 18, Saginaw (OHL)
Headache for D-men. Alert, unafraid and strong
ACQUIRED '15 draft, 33rd overall NHL '18-19

3. Adam Erne, LW, 20, Quebec (QMJHL)
Power forward a force to be reckoned with
ACQUIRED '13 draft, 33rd overall NHL '16-17

4. Dominik Masin, D, 19, Peterborough (OHL)
North American adjustment going well, he's tough
ACQUIRED '14 draft, 35th overall NHL '17-18

5. Slater Koekkoek, D, 21, Syracuse (AHL)
Looks to rebound from shoulder surgeries
ACQUIRED '12 draft, 10th overall NHL '15-16

6. Kristers Gudlevskis, G, 23, Syracuse (AHL)
No. 1 in AHL with Vasilevskiy in NHL, call-ups good

7. Adam Wilcox, G, 22, Minnesota (BIG TEN)
All-time leader at Minn. in SP (.922) and GAA (2.09)
ACQUIRED '11 draft, 178th overall NHL '18-19

8. Brayden Point, C, 19, Moose Jaw (WHL)
Undersized playmaker produces points
ACQUIRED '14 draft, 79th overall NHL '18-19

9. Matthew Spencer, D, 18, Peterborough (OHL)
All-around defender had rough season on Petes
ACQUIRED '15 draft, 44th overall NHL '18-19

10. Dennis Yan, LW, 18, Shawinigan (QMJHL)
Inconsistent game-to-game, period-to-period
ACQUIRED '15 draft, 64th overall NHL '18-19

2015 NO. 1 DRAFT PICK

NAME
Mitchell Stephens

POSITION

SELECTED

2014-15
Saginaw (OHL)

SCOUTING REPORT
A meteoric riser in the rankings, Stephens parlayed his star turn at the world under-18s into a top-35 selection. Fast and competitive, he wrung out as much offense in Saginaw as he could on a mediocre squad on its way up.

TORONTO MAPLE LEAFS

JAMES VAN RIEMSDYK

A CHANGE OF SEASONS

WITH NEW COACH BABCOCK IN CHARGE, THE LEAFS SHIP OUT THEIR BEST PLAYER AND BEGIN THE REBUILD IN EARNEST

BY MIKE BROPHY

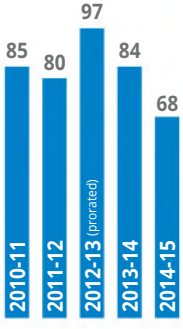
THIS IS BRENDAN SHANAHAN'S team now. The Toronto Maple Leafs president quietly observed his organization for a year and then, like a tsunami, washed away a significant portion of the hockey department, including GM Dave Nonis. Shanahan pressed forward, shaping his vision of the organization with the help of assistant GM Kyle Dubas and director of player personnel Mark Hunter.

After a half-decade as the face of the franchise, Phil Kessel was shipped out for picks and prospects. The move surprised few, after Shanahan had promised sweeping changes to his roster.

However, the Leafs' biggest – and most surprising – summer headlines were Shanahan's off-ice moves: hiring Mike Babcock as coach and Lou Lamoriello as GM. The pair brings authority, credibility and stability to the franchise. With the front office overhaul complete, the focus now turns to the necessary, albeit "painful," process off player development.

GIFT OF 'BABS' Babcock brings instant credibility to the Maple Leafs.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE The first roster casualty was the enigmatic Kessel, traded to the Pittsburgh Penguins July 1. The team's leading scorer the past six seasons, Kessel is coming off a dismal 25-goal year. The Leafs won't miss his personality, but they will miss his scoring: he has the fifth-most goals in the NHL since 2009-10 (181).

One year after potting 30 goals for the first time, James van Riemsdyk slipped slightly to 27. Without Kessel, the talent-challenged Leafs will rely on 'JVR' as their top scoring threat.

Rather than filling out the forward group with rookies, management opted for stopgap UFA options: P-A Parenteau, Shawn Matthias, Mark Arcobello and Daniel Winnik were signed to short-term deals at minimal cost.

DEFENSE If scoring goals was hard for the Leafs, keeping the puck out of their net was even tougher. Toronto ranked 26th in goals against. The hope is captain Dion Phaneuf will find his game under Babcock, while youngsters Morgan Rielly and Jake Gardiner will continue to emerge. Veterans Roman Polak and Stephane Robidas will provide leadership and stability. Free agent Matt Hunwick was signed as a depth option, while 23-year-old Martin Marincin was acquired at the draft.

GOALTENDING Jonathan Bernier hasn't turned out to be the savior the Leafs hoped they were getting from the Kings two years ago. His habit of allowing bad goals must cease. James Reimer hasn't been able to grab the starter's job, and that's not likely to change.

SPECIAL TEAMS The power play revolved around setting Kessel up on his off wing, so a new approach is needed. Nazem Kadri has been waiting for the opportunity to show his skill, so he will get a chance to flex his offensive muscles.

The addition of Winnik will help the penalty kill.

INTANGIBLES Toronto's biggest problem in recent years, next to its lack of talent, is leadership. That no one stepped up to stop 'Stickgate' – the decision to blow off fans by not saluting them after a victory – speaks volumes about the players who were supposed to be the leaders on the club.

The lack of leadership was evident late in the season when Kadri, who isn't yet established as a frontline NHLer, started skipping optional practices and nobody said boo.

ROOKIES Right winger Connor Brown led AHL rookies in scoring with 21 goals and 61 points in 76 games. A stellar camp could see him make the club, but another year in the AHL is most likely.

Stuart Percy played nine NHL games last season and will take a serious run at securing a spot on the blueline.

First-rounders Frederik Gauthier, Kasperi Kapanen, William Nylander and Mitch Marner have outside shots at making the team, but none will be rushed.

X-FACTOR There will be no shortcuts under Babcock. He's a demanding coach, and if a player cannot deal with that, then he'll play elsewhere.

The exile of Kessel is a message to the roster that half-efforts won't be tolerated under the team's new culture. Babcock isn't looking for overnight results, but he'll expect an instant buy-in to his system.

THE BRASS Lamoriello brings the experience that was lacking in the Leafs' front office, but Dubas and Hunter remain the brains behind the rebuild.

Ownership is standing behind the build-from-within approach – a major departure from recent regimes. Shanahan has vowed to build his team into a contender through the draft and has placed a priority on acquiring draft picks.

SCOUTING REPORT
London has a great track record of producing skill, so it was no shock ex-Knights GM Mark Hunter tabbed Marner. Slight but dynamic and brilliant with the puck, Marner mostly played wing, but Hunter sees him as a center in the NHL.

VANCOUVER CANUCKS

RYAN MILLER

WAVERING IN THE PACIFIC

SOME OFF-SEASON MOVES SCREAMED 'REBUILD,' OTHERS SIGNALLED 'WIN NOW.' WHERE ARE THE CANUCKS HEADED?

BY BEN KUZMA

IT TOOK JIM BENNING A LONG TIME to get over the Vancouver Canucks' sobering, six-game playoff loss to the Flames. It took a short time for the GM to make notable changes to his roster, front office and even the medical staff.

Benning revamped his front office with the firings of vice-president of hockey operations Laurence Gilman, assistant GM Lorne Henning and director of player personnel Eric Crawford. He also overhauled the roster by shipping out defenseman Kevin Bieksa, goaltender Eddie Lack, right winger Zack Kassian and center Nick Bonino. Brandon Sutter and Brandon Prust were all that came back in return.

Vancouver could have as many as nine roster players on expiring contracts, which will usher in more turnover. Benning maintains the team will stay competitive, but it looks more like the Canucks are demilitarizing while the rest of the Pacific Division continues the arms race.

TOP GUNS
The Sedins continue to lead the way offensively.

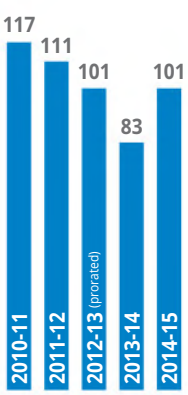
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE Vancouver loved the team-high 31 goals Radim Vrbata provided. The Canucks will need him to hit that total again.

Daniel Sedin (20 goals), Henrik Sedin (18) and Alexandre Burrows (18) will provide much of the rest of the scoring, because the club has to replace the 18 Shawn Matthias took to Toronto. Sophomore Bo Horvat (13 goals) has 20-goal potential, while Sutter be given a chance to showcase his offensive potential as a second-line center.

Sven Baertschi will get a second-line shot, but the Canucks will struggle to match last season's output. If production from the back end remains a black hole – Alex Edler led with 31 points – they're in trouble.

DEFENSE The top four of Edler with Chris Tanev and Dan Hamhuis with Yannick Weber stays intact.

Bieksa had been demoted to the third pairing, so getting a second-round pick from Anaheim was a good return for a 34-year-old. It means free agent acquisition Matt

ALEXANDER EDLER

Bartkowski, 27, will join Luca Sbisa on the bottom pair, while Frank Corrado and Taylor Fedun will be depth options.

Vancouver's inabilities to handle the Flames' forecheck and defend down low were exposed in the playoffs. There's no thumper on the back end, so positioning and puck movement will be paramount.

GOALTENDING Benning dealt Lack to Carolina for third- and seventh-round picks, which means the Canucks have opted to place their faith in Jacob Markstrom, 25. He expertly backstopped the AHL Utica Comets to the Calder Cup final to get his game back on track, but his career NHL numbers are dreadful: a 13-28-5 record, 3.19 goals-against average and an .896 save percentage.

PLAYOFF RECORD
18-22 (since '11)

With two more years at $6 million per tied up in 35-year-old Ryan Miller, who's coming off a knee injury, the crease will continue to be in the spotlight.

SPECIAL TEAMS The power play toyed with deploying four forwards, with two wingers in the slot, and using the drop pass to gain the offensive zone. The Sedins led the way with a combined 50 man-advantage points. Weber provided a heavy, accurate point shot, and Vrbata had a dozen early power play goals. But the search for a workable second unit remains.

The penalty kill finished second overall thanks to its proficiency on faceoffs and strong play from Chris Higgins and the departed Brad Richardson.

INTANGIBLES The Canucks could get pushed around, but acquiring Prust for the mercurial Kassian speaks to Benning's quest for more bite. Prust and Derek Dorsett will flank Linden Vey, meaning $5.15 million is tied up in two bottom-six wingers, though they at least provide a blue-collar work ethic and toughness.

In a division full of scary centers, a middle of Henrik Sedin, Sutter, Horvat and Vey won't strike fear into anybody.

ROOKIES Benning drafted Jake Virtanen sixth overall in 2014 because he plays with an edge, can get to the net and finish. Shoulder surgery limited Virtanen to 50 WHL games in which he had 21 goals and 52 points. He'll get at least a nine-game NHL audition.

X-FACTOR Miller must steal games for the Canucks. Injured in a collision with Jannik Hansen in late February, he admitted to playing through pain in the playoffs. If Miller's numbers remain middling (2.53 GAA, .911 SP), Vancouver can kiss the post-season goodbye.

THE BRASS The Canucks vowed to get younger, faster and better. But then they chased Vancouver-native Milan Lucic, 27, at the draft and traded a younger Kassian for an older Prust. They can't maintain a dual mandate of being in transition and making the playoffs.

SCOUTING REPORT
It's tough for young players to score in the USHL, but Boeser was one of the circuit's top snipers thanks to his sturdy frame and cannon shot. The University of North Dakota commit has great instincts and plays a complete game.

RIGHT WING AGENDA

WASHINGTON HASN'T ADVANCED PAST THE SECOND ROUND WITH OVECHKIN. EXPECT THAT TO CHANGE THIS SEASON

BY BRIAN MCNALLY

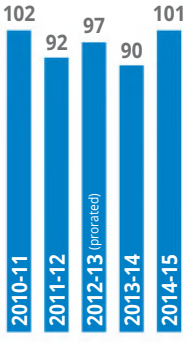
ALEX OVECHKIN HITS A MILESTONE in September. Just weeks before his 11th NHL season begins, he turns 30. The clock continues to tick for Ovechkin and his franchise.

The Washington Capitals have yet to break through the second round of the playoffs during the 'Ovie' era. Last spring's playoff run ended with a devastating Game 7 overtime loss to the Rangers in the Eastern Conference semifinal. But after a flurry of off-season moves, there is hope the team is again poised to be a contender and take advantage of Ovechkin's prime before age begins to take a toll.

Washington overhauled the right side of its forward group by adding wingers T.J. Oshie and three-time Cup champ Justin Williams. Those moves, coupled with the continued development of young players Evgeny Kuznetsov, Andre Burakovsky and Tom Wilson, are what the brain-trust believes will fuel the team's progress.

CAPS LOCK
Even at 30, Ovechkin is guaranteed to get goals galore.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE The offense begins with Ovechkin, who led the NHL in goals (53) for the fifth time. Oshie, acquired from the Blues for Troy Brouwer, has the creativity and skill to make for a breathtaking top line teamed with Ovechkin and Nicklas Backstrom. Williams could also fit with the top guns.

Burakovsky and Kuznetsov, who re-signed for two years in July, earned more trust from coach Barry Trotz as last season progressed.

Add in Marcus Johansson, who's coming off a 20-goal season, and the Capitals are in the enviable spot of having seven quality offensive forwards for six spots. There is concern about Backstrom, who had hip surgery in May and might not be ready for the start of the season.

BRADEN HOLTBY

HOLTBY: GRAIG ABEL/NHLI VIA GETTY IMAGES

in sheltered minutes on the third pair, but Washington couldn't devote so much money to that spot. Carlson's offensive emergence softens the impact.

The bottom pairing will rely on younger players Nate Schmidt and Dmitry Orlov – both returning from injury-plagued seasons – along with Taylor Chorney, an AHL veteran who impressed at the end of last season with Pittsburgh.

GOALTENDING Washington's No. 1 priority in the off-season was re-signing RFA goalie Braden Holtby, who at 25 established himself as one of the NHL's best in 2014-15. Holtby was seventh in save percentage (.923) and fifth in goals-against average (2.22). No goaltender started more games (72).

The Capitals will likely use top prospect Philipp Grubauer as backup and decrease Holtby's starts. They signed vet Dan Ellis as a depth option.

SPECIAL TEAMS The power play should again be a force. Washington led the league on the man advantage, and Oshie provides yet another option in a 1-3-1 setup. Carlson struggled at times on the point, especially during the playoffs. Green was always an option there. Niskanen can play that role, too.

The penalty kill is a question mark with Brouwer, Joel Ward and Eric Fehr leaving. That's three of the six best penalty killing forwards gone. Jay Beagle and Brooks Laich remain to anchor that group, while Oshie, who killed penalties for the Blues, will be useful.

INTANGIBLES Few teams have more playoff experience and less to show for it. Ovechkin and Backstrom have each appeared in more than 70 playoff games. Carlson and Alzner – still in their mid-20s – have a combined 96. Holtby has started five playoff series and won two. With the addition of Oshie and Williams, the Caps hope they've found the right mix.

ROOKIES Grubauer should back up Holtby, and there are depth spots available for bottom-six players like Liam O'Brien. Winger Stanislav Galiev should also push for a spot.

The top prospects in Washington's system – forwards Jakub Vrana and Riley Barber and defenseman Madison Bowey – will develop in Hershey.

X-FACTOR Williams is a Conn Smythe winner and a three-time Stanley Cup champion with a history of Game 7 magic (7-0 all-time), so perhaps that will rub off on a franchise that is 4-10 in those games.

THE BRASS Trotz gave the Capitals immediate stability behind the bench in his first season and led them to the playoffs.

GM Brian MacLellan hired Trotz, overhauled the D-corps last summer by signing Niskanen and Orpik, and has been active in the trade market, trying to push his team over the top.

SCOUTING REPORT
Throwing conventional wisdom out the window, the Caps took a goalie in the first round. But if anyone was worth it, the big Russian fit the bill. Samsonov has no obvious flaws to his game. He's quick, aggressive and positionally sound.

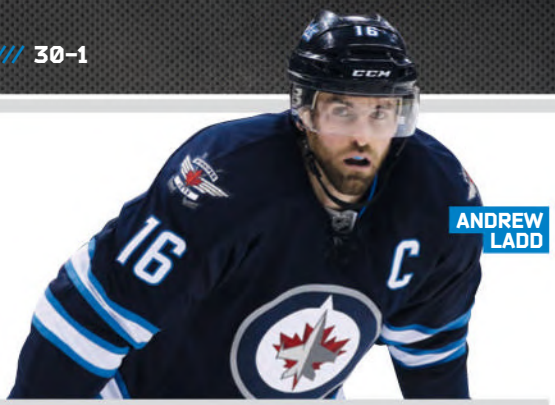
WINNIPEG JETS



ANDREW LADD

READY FOR A DOGFIGHT

IT WAS A SLOW BUILD, BUT THE JETS ARE FINALLY A PLAYOFF TEAM. HOW HIGH CAN THEY FLY IN THE CUTTHROAT WEST?

BY TIM CAMPBELL

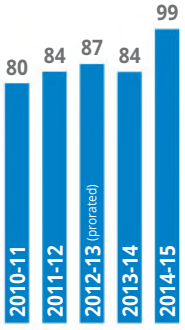
WAS IT A MOVE TO THE NHL'S high-rent district or just a visit? The proof, one way or the other, is coming. A one-off remains a possibility, but the Winnipeg Jets had substance behind their first playoff berth since 2007.

In the league's deepest division, the Jets come off an in-division record of 16-8-5 and a reduction of goals-against to a franchise-low 210, putting them in the NHL's top 10 in that category for the first time. It all added up to major buzz in Winnipeg.

Deep on defense, and again counting on late-season hero Ondrej Pavelec in goal, the team will have a stable of top-six forwards led by captain and leading scorer Andrew Ladd. But their bottom-six will be markedly different, and likely younger, with the return of Alexander Burmistrov from two years in the KHL and possibly QMJHL scoring dynamo Nikolaj Ehlers, the team's first-rounder in 2014.

NO-FLUFF BUFF
Everything Byfuglien does on the ice, he does hard.

TRENDING
Regular Season Performance in Points



OFFENSE The Jets had scoring balance for a change, as nine players had 15 or more goals. That was in contrast to the one-line show of the previous two seasons.

Ladd's career-best 62 points set the pace as he, Blake Wheeler and the underrated Bryan Little continued to be steady producers.

A legitimate second line, anchored by the duo of Mark Scheifele and Mathieu Perreault make the Jets tougher to check, and emerging third-line center Adam Lowry, 22, enhances the balance.

Dustin Byfuglien returned full-time to the blueline and will continue to be a major threat in the Jets' offensive scheme, which has emphasized quickness and speed under coach Paul Maurice.

DEFENSE The trio of Byfuglien, Tyler Myers and Jacob Trouba comprise the best right side of any D-corps in the NHL.

The left side figures to be much the same, including the versatile Toby Enstrom, Mark Stuart and 24-year-old Ben Chiarot, who emerged from the AHL last season as a sturdy defender.

With the obvious exception of their four-game sweep by the Ducks, the Jets made major progress in their own zone in 2014-15.

GOALTENDING Pavelec had the usual good and bad segments last season. The worst was allowing a costly game-winning floater in March against St. Louis. But that was immediately followed by his best hockey as a Jet. Pavelec's final numbers (2.28 GAA, .920 save percentage) were a step up and the best of his career, sparking hope the 28-year-old has finally turned the corner as a No. 1.

Michael Hutchinson snatched Pavelec's job for a time in his rookie season and has given the Jets a viable second option.

SPECIAL TEAMS Perreault, a 2014 free agent signing, was a power play catalyst for the Jets. Still, even with launchers like Byfuglien, Trouba and Enstrom on the point, the team doesn't get enough pucks through.

The departure of free agent Michael Frolik to Calgary is a multi-level hit. Gone is a versatile, experienced five-on-five right winger and one of the team's top penalty killers. That unit had its troubles last season and could be a major headache, given the Jets were the NHL's most shorthanded team.

INTANGIBLES The tracksuit-in-the-shower incident that led to the Evander Kane trade actually solidified the room as the team's leadership took a step forward. And with Ladd setting the tone, the Jets gutted it out through the last month of the season with injuries and suspensions to key players to qualify for the playoffs.

ROOKIES One of the league's youngest teams could get younger still. Ehlers, 19, is the most likely addition if he can handle the pro game. Right winger Joel Armia, acquired in the Kane trade, needs only to upgrade his consistency to find a spot. Junior grad center Nic Petan was a final cut last fall, while center Andrew Copp left Michigan after two years and may be a fit for the fourth line.

X-FACTOR Are Pavelec and a commitment to defense now solid foundations? Another concern is holding leads. Against the Ducks, the Jets led each game of the sweep, and during the regular season stumbled frequently. They were scored on 11 times in the final five minutes of close games versus only three such rallies of their own.

THE BRASS Maurice, who got some coach-of-the-year votes, has been a winning choice.

GM Kevin Cheveldayoff earned goodwill for his patience and the blockbuster with Buffalo. He was under some fire for being too passive in the first three years, but adding Stafford and Myers and making the playoffs dramatically changed the city's mood.

BLACKHAWKS' BRAINCHILD

STAN BOWMAN

BOWMAN'S GREATNESS IS ROOTED IN HIS ABILITY TO MAKE TOUGH CHOICES. LIKE FATHER, LIKE SON

GOING INTO 2015-16, ONLY eight active NHL players have won three Stanley Cups. Six are Chicago Blackhawks, and a seventh, Patrick Sharp, was just traded from them. Justin Williams is the only player on the list who's never been a Blackhawk.

We're willing to bet the six who are still in Chicago – Jonathan Toews, Patrick Kane, Duncan Keith, Marian Hossa, Brent Seabrook and Niklas Hjalmarsson – will be good for a couple more before their careers end. In doing so, they'd become the most decorated players of their generation. The most recent player to win four Stanley Cups with the same team was Detroit's Nicklas Lidstrom, who retired three years ago. Mark Messier, who packed it in a decade ago, is the most recent to retire with five with the same team, which he did in Edmonton before adding a sixth as captain of the New York Rangers. Nobody has left the game with six Stanley Cups on one club since Canadiens legend Larry Robinson retired 23 years ago.

But these six Hawks could be the ones. In an era where one-and-done (Carolina, Anaheim, Pittsburgh, Boston) is more prevalent than sustained excellence, the Blackhawks are threatening to crash the parity. These guys are so good at being great they're putting to the test the Gary Bettman fantasy league where everyone plays .500, gets all their wins by one goal and leaves the Stanley Cup the next year for someone else to win it.

Yes, the Blackhawks took a substantial hit to their depth after winning the Stanley Cup in June, losing Sharp, Brandon Saad, Brad Richards, Antoine Vermette, Johnny Oduya and Kimmo Timonen. But they've been replaced by Trevor Daley, Trevor van Riemsdyk, Ryan Garbutt, Artem Anisimov, Marko Dano, Artemi Panarin and Viktor Tikhonov.

Does that make them better for 2015-16? Perhaps not, but the fact it's even debatable is a testament to GM Stan Bowman, a guy who has won three Stanley Cups but has never finished higher than fourth in voting for GM of the year. He learned well from his father, Scotty, who can only wish his record as a GM was half as good as the one his son has compiled in only six seasons. As the greatest coach in the history of professional North American sports, Bowman never allowed his teams to become complacent. It was always about keeping them on the edge, because often they were so good their only real opponent was their previous accomplishments.

It's much the same with his son, who has displayed the same ice-crunching, cold-blooded calculative thinking. If a player doesn't fit under the salary cap – whether he was drafted and developed by Chicago or has won three Stanley Cups there – and he's expendable, he's shipped out and in comes a new crew of players who have never won a Stanley Cup before. The cycle has repeated itself every time the Blackhawks have won the Cup.

By having a keen sense of the right time to cut a player loose, Bowman has been able to keep the real core of his team together. He has Toews, Kane and Keith under contract for the next eight seasons. Name the best centerman, right winger and defenseman in the game today, and chances are if each of those names isn't at the top of the list, it's in your top three.

Goalie Corey Crawford is under contract until 2020. Hjalmarsson has another four years left on his deal. Hossa is signed for six more (though at 36 he's unlikely to play out his contract). Of the core, only Seabrook is signed short-term. He has another year to go, and will be 31 when his deal expires after next season. Even Joel Quenneville, who seems to be able to read the pulse of his team better than any other coach in the league, is under contract for the next two.

> STAN BOWMAN HAS A KEEN SENSE OF WHEN THE RIGHT TIME IS TO CUT A PLAYER LOOSE

So you see, players will move in, players will move out. Those who no longer fit under the financial constraints will be cut loose, no hard feelings and thanks a lot for your service. They'll be replaced by others on short-term deals. Some will be young players the Blackhawks have developed, others will come there for less money so they can take a run at a Stanley Cup.

But the core will be here for a long time. Get used to it. The Blackhawks might win it all again this season. And even if they don't, they'll be a threat to do so for the better part of the next decade. THN
